DR. PROBASCO BIBLE CLASS HOLDS DINNER

Members of the rival Red and Blue teams of the Probasco Bible class held a dinner in the boys' room of the Y. M. C. A. last evening at which the Reds entertained the Blues as a result of a recent competition in recruiting new members for the class. The dinner was served by Mrs. Johnson, caterer of the Park Club and was pronounced excellent by the boys. Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, pastor of the First Baptist church; J. A. Church, superintendent of the Sunday-school of the the same church and F. K. Anderson, who coached the young fellows for the recent successful plays given by the class, were the speakers. Dr. Norman H. Probasco, the class teacher, was toastmaster.

After the banquet and speaking, the evening was spent in music furnished by a quartet of the boys and instrumental selections on the piano and phonograph.

Dr. Chambliss told the diners that he believed the class was one of the finest organizations in the city. He recalled memories of Dr. Probasco's father with credit to the son and urged the young men to continue along the lines that were being mapped out for and with them and they would become the real representatives citizens of the city.

Mr. Church gave an interesting history of the formation of the classes which had resulted in the birth of the present large class and paid a high tribute to Dr. Probasco for the work accomplished by him in spite of his close confinement to the duties of his profession.

The closing speech by Mr. Anderson was illuminative of what can be accomplished by the right kind of endeavor. He graciously acknowledged the gift presented to him by the boys in appreciation of his work with them in the presentation of their dramatic efforts and dwelt at length on civic righteousness, urging them to take a living part in all that concerns the vital interests of their community. Cheers punctuated the speeches of all the speakers and the evening was voted one of the most pleasant ever spent in the history of the class.

THE FORUM.

Gloekler License.

Editor, The Daily Press:—

It seems to me it would be a matter of public interest to know upon what grounds seventy-five business men of Plainfield signed a petition to the Common Council asking for a reconsideration of the application of Mr. Gleokler. If it is true, as the Council evidently assumed it to be, that Mr. Gloekler sold liquor to minors, he violated the conditions of his license and the city ordinances. In that case, why should another license be granted? If violations are to be thus easily overlooked, why prescribe any penalty? From the point of view of the non-business citizen, this corner of Front street has always been an offence and an eye sore. Now that there is an opportunity to remove the offence why should anyone desire to continue it?

Possibly the men appealed to sign from good nature; if so it does more credit (?) to the heart than to the head. Saloons are bad enough wherever placed, but on street corners, they are particularly objectionable. The business of selling liquor is an evil, although owing to social conditions, it may be necessary to permit it under limitations.. Surely no one should waste any sentiment over a man who violates his license and makes it possible for a child to enter upon a course which will in all probability lead to ruin, because he has a large stock of liquor on hand. Let us hope that this, one of the best business locations in Plainfield, may hereafter be devoted to some higher use.

DRY CLEANING TALK
Number 2
WHAT IS DRY CLEANING?

Many people have erroneous ideas about what Dry Cleaning really is—believing that their clothes are actually cleaned dry—as if by magic method we pass our hands over the Garment and say "Presto!" It is clean.

Dry is a misnomer. "Chemical" cleaning would be a more intelligent name, but people might confuse "Chemical," thinking of acids, alkalies, etc., not used in Dry Cleaning.

The truth is we depend largely upon gasolene, naphtha, benzine—there's a difference—and other petroleum and coal tar products, for our cleansing bath instead of water as do the launderers.

The secret and successful operations in Dry Cleaning are learned only by hard experience and study, coupled with proper equipment. These are what enable us to do superior work.

We know our business thoroughly and are properly equipped in plant, collection and delivery.

in effect in 1905. The commission reduced the tax rate from $2.00 to $1.70, while the assessments are said to be proportionately lower than before. A floating debt of $400,000 was paid off and in 1909 the cash on hand was $900,000. The city has bought a waterworks and made enormous paying additions (which are not assessed on property in Houston), has acquired new parks and deepened the ship channel instead of languishing in the hope of a federal subsidy. The price of gas has been forced down from $1.50 to $1.15 per thousand. In advertising herself to attract new industries, Houston states her city hall is a business house; she has no wards, no ward politicians and no graft.

"There have been many explanations offered for the undoubted relative successes of the commission plan. The abolition of the wards, for example, is frequently quoted as ample reason for the relative success of the new plan. There are many cities in the United States, however, in which there are no wards, and they have never attracted attention by their superior efficiency. Galveston had no wards before the flood, her City Council being elected at large.

"Most of the explanations are only half true, because they involve a study only of the internal mechanism of the government, whereas the real difference between the old and the new comes at the point of contact between the government and the people.

"The secret of the success of the plan lies in the fact that the governmental power is taken out of obscurities and placed upon a pinacle of light where all the citizens can watch it.

"No mere form of government will automatically produce good government. But forms can be devised that will automatically give popular government. The people's will can be baffled or facilitated by the form of government. The people's work at the polls can be made obscure, complex and difficult. Or it can be made clear, simple and easy. Under the commission plan with its short ballot, the people's work is very clear, very simple, very easy! And that is all the secret there is to the success of the plan!

"The initiative, referendum and recall are considered important features of the plan by many people, but Galveston and Houston made a success of the commission plan before any of these features were thought of and their charters to this day do not proxide for them. Furthermore, these cities do not feel the need of these devices and there is no demand for their introduction.

Mr. Childs offered to answer any questions his audience might like to ask and was primed for most of them, but when some one inquired as to the advisability of a city of the size of Plainfield owning its own water plant he was forced to reply that it "all depended on circumstances." He was roundly applauded at the conclusion of his speech.

Mr. Miller followed in a lengthy discourse in which he likened the commission form of government to the signal of distress which finally brings help. He told of the defects of the old style of municipal government and how they can be remedied. Referring to his own city, Philadelphia, he did not hesitate to lay bare the inner workings of the City Council and its methods of graft. He pointed out the difference in the class of laws enacted by National, State and city governments and urged the people who are looking for better times to secure the simplest form of government.

The speaker suggested five reasons why the new way was the best: First, the small board of five men; second, commissioners are representatives at large instead of ward representatives; third, partisan methods are abolished; fourth, under the commission form departments are the commissioners, and fifth, the initiative, referendum and recall are absolutely essential, for without them the city might be worse off than under the old style of government. "It would be better," he said, "for the bill now before your Legislature to fail of passage than to have the three provisions omitted."

The banquet held in the Waldorf was more largely attended than the committee, of which George H. Christian was chairman, had expected, with the result that some twenty-five members who arrived late could not obtain admittance to the banquet room which was crowded to its capacity. However, the dinner proved popular and arrangements will be made next month to accommodate all who wish to attend. William Jeffery presided at both the banquet and at the meeting which followed in the Chamber's rooms.

Mr. Christian announced that two of the invited guests, Mayor Wittpen, of Jersey City, and Senator Baker, had been detained on account of illness and other unforseen circumstances, but they promised to come to the April dinner. There were 100 members and guests at the dinner last evening and apparently all enjoyed the menu.

The banquet committee was composed of George A. Christian, chairman; J. V. E. Vanderhoef, Herman Schwed, M. C. Van Arsdale, Thad Doane, Jr., F. A. Duttenhoffer, George M. Clark, W. S. Angleman, William Jeffery and P. H. Burns.

A committee consisting of William Jeffery, A. E. Force, W. S. Angleman, Charles J. McNab and Judge John Ulrich, are in Trenton today to join with committees from all parts of the State to urge the passage of the bill which will come up before the joint committee of the Senate and House today permitting municipalities to install the commission form of government. It is believed that Governor Wilson is in favor of the measure and that the influence brought to bear on the committee will have a favorable result. It is believed that every municipality of the State will be represented.

It has been said that those who will speak before the committee are fully committed to the inclusion in the bill of the initiative, referendum and recall clauses, but in any event the probabilities are that the bill, even without these clauses will be favorably reported.

Feast of Purim.

The Feast of Purim began yesterday. The story of the deliverance of Israel commemorated by this festival is given in the book of Esther, where, also, the appointment of the annual holiday is narrated. It is a semi-religious festival. Yesterday until sunset was observed as a fast, the fast of Esther, preliminary to the festival.

SENATE PASSES BILL TO PROTECT CHILDREN.

Senator Leavitt's bill to prevent the attendance of children under 14 years of age at any theatre or moving picture house or under 18 years of age in any dance hall was passed by the Senate last night, with but one vote in the negative, Senator Edge, of Atlantic county. It was about half an hour after the vote was taken that Senator Edge announced that he wanted to be recorded in the negative as he believed the bill was a bad one.

WOOD PULP PAPER.

Forced Into Use by the Scarcity of Rag Stock.

In the early days of printing it was hardly possible to employ anything but first class paper in making books, for the reason that wood fiber and wood pulp paper had not then come into use. At that time good cotton and linen rags were turned into fine, firm, pure white paper, well able to withstand indefinitely the yellowing and disintegrating effects of time.

As the increase in the demand for printing paper grew apace it was soon found that there were not enough rags to go round. Thus wool pulp came into use.

All vegetable fiber is suitable for paper making, whether it be obtained from rags, wood, esparto grass, straw or other substances. When these fibers are torn apart they are clogged with gum, a substance that must be thoroughly dissolved and washed away by chemicals if the best results are to be obtained.

Wood pulp paper is made of finely ground wood, usually spruce, the grinding being done with a beating engine, run at high speed, and huge stones between which the wood is reduced to a kind of pulp. That done, it is made up into paper without any preliminary removal of the gum or other deleterious ingredients.—Harper's Weekly.

ELECTRIC FOGHORNS.

Which May Be Blown Without Effort by Pressing a Push Button.

The time honored foghorn and still the one in most common use on myriads of smaller boats is of the sort that you raise to your lips and blow. Tolerably hard work blowing a foghorn.

Bigger foghorns for larger boats are set in a box, the box containing a bellows by which the horn is blown. Attached to the bellows is an outside lever by means of which the bellows is operated by hand. A lot of noise this foghorn makes, to be heard for a considerable distance.

There are now made, used on many power boats and yachts, electric foghorns the operating of which calls for the exercise of neither lung nor hand power. In these horns there is attached, inclosed at the smaller end, a metallic diaphragm to which is connected an electric coil which when electricity is turned into it vibrates the diaphragm and sounds the horn. Electricity is supplied from a storage battery or from current generated on the boat if it is electrically equipped. To blow an electric foghorn you simply press a button.—New York Sun.

"Robbing Peter to Pay Paul."

That proverb "robbing Peter to pay Paul" arose from the way in which the dean of Westminster was treated at the time of the reformation. As abbot he had been an independent dignitary, but as dean he was placed under the authority of a specially created bishop of Westminster. This diocese after existing for ten years was merged in the see of London, and many of the domains of St. Peter's abbey passed into the hands of the chapter of St. Paul's cathedral, thus giving rise to the now familiar saying. "It was by a hard struggle," writes Dean Stanley, "that the abbey was saved in those tempestuous times. Its dependency of the priory of St. Martin's le Grand was torn to pieces, and its outlying domains to the east of Westminster were, it is said, sacrificed to the Protector Somerset to induce him to forbear from pulling down the abbey itself."—London Chronicle.

Familiar Sayings.

"I don't like your weigh," remarked the customer to the dishonest grocer.

"I hope I make myself clear," said the water as it passed through the filter.

"Reading makes the full man, but writing doesn't," complained the half starved poet.

"My resources are all tied up," said the tramp as he placed his bundle on a stick.

"The rest is silence," quoted the musician, explaining the meaning of that term to his pupil.

"This is a complete give away," remarked Papa Santa Claus as he finished stripping the Christmas tree.

"I call that treating a friend in a rather distant manner," said the doctor as he hung up the receiver after prescribing over the telephone.—Boston Transcript.

Cheap by the Hour.

"I must say you've got a pretty lot of citizens to allow themselves to be charged at the rate of 5 cents a mile from here down to the Junction on a miserable one horse branch road," said the shoe drummer bitingly.

"I'd like ter call yer attention ter one fact before you go on usin' any more sech language," answered the ticket agent calmly, "and that is that, while it may be 5 cents a mile, it's only 35 cents an hour."—Metropolitan Magazine.

Impartial.

"What did the captain of the vessel do when he found the men were not disposed to do their full duty?"

"He gave up the voyage and docked the vessel."

"What then?"

"Then he docked the crew."—Baltimore American.

Surpassing All Others. Today, Tomorrow and Thursday

This will be a gala week for lovers of fashion and finery—the hour of our Opening Exposition has arrived and tomorrow we bid you come to see and enjoy a display of springtime apparel and other merchandise larger in extent—broader in variety, finer in quality than has ever been made in Newark—an exhibit no other store in Jersey could make, because no other one has such facilities, such broad acres, such fine merchandise.

INVITATION EXTENDED TO ALL--No Cards
See the Beautiful New Hats, Gowns, Dresses, Suits, Coats, Waists; Misses', Children's and Infants' Apparel
EVERY PART OF THE STORE IN ITS BEST BIB AND TUCKER

THIS WEEK'S NOTABLE SELLING FEATURES

We do not propose to devote all our thought or time or space to showing pretty things this week We've planned to double the interest by presenting a galaxy of attractive selling features—goods and garments of the most seasonable character at prices far below normal—in some cases extraordinary.

Feast of Beauty With a Feast of Bargains

Prepare yourself therefore for a feast of beauty in the opening shows, and at the same time a feast of bargains such as no other Newark store could present. The State's Greatest Store will do the city and itself honor and cover itself with glory this season—depend upon it.

SUPERB DRESSES FOR ONLY $10.75

We couldn't have secured anything for this week's selling more attractive than this lot of dresses. Their beauty will be unquestioned by anyone who sees them—few women will be able to resist buying more than one. There are so many styles and all made of such splendid materials, and so thoroughly up-to-date that everyone will want one or more of them at the insignificant price at which we plan to sell them.

These dresses are of Satin Foulard, Chiffon Taffeta and Gold Cloth, in plain hairline stripe or polka dot effects, with fine lace yokes and collars or in pretty low neck styles; pretty braid or combination trimming—deep border effects now so fashionable; long or kimono sleeves, skirts panel gored or plaited; every style a new one; all the dresses in custom finish; sizes for small, medium and extra large women; any suit in the collection for $10.75

Popular Priced Coats

We are devoting ourselves to securing the most beautiful coats that the best makers produce, and our showing this Spring will be most attractive, indeed. But we realize that where one woman selects a garment of the fine sort and is willing to pay for the very best in quality, style and exclusiveness there are dozens, perhaps hundreds, who buy coats as much for service as for good looks, and who seek to economize. It is to these that the four lots of coats we tell of below will especially appeal.

Women's and Misses' Blue Serge Coats—24 inches long; semi-fitted models; trimmed with check sailor collar and piped with red satin; one of the coats we feature at $12.50

Women's and Misses' Blue Serge Coats—Semi-fitted with satin shawl collar and various pipings; well tailored; extraordinary value at our price $9.98

Women's and Misses' Coats of Fancy Spring Mixtures—54 in. long; some with sailor collar as well as long shawl collar; trimmed with various piping and silks; special priced $9.98 and $12.50

Women's 36-inch Black Broadcloth Coats in regular and in-between sizes, especially adapted for short-waisted women; splendid value at $6.50

Here Are Rugs of Quality

To Beautify the Floors of the New Home or the Old.

Certainly there is no similar assortment of good grade rugs in the State—we doubt if any Metropolitan store surpasses our showing of American made rugs.

This, as you may know, is a really great Carpet Store. We sell more floor coverings than any two or three stores in Newark, and this big selling brings us in touch with the biggest mills in a way that gives us command of many advantages and exclusive control of many weaves and patterns.

The variety of patterns we present for your choice and the range of weaves and sizes is large indeed, and no one should have any difficulty finding exactly what they desire.

Prices, as will be found on making intelligent comparison, are always at the lowest point consistent with quality.

French Wilton Rugs—Fine as silk, more beautiful than ever before, the highest class made, are in the popular room size, 9x12 ft., for $55.

Bundhar Wilton Rugs—One of the most popular of the standard weaves because of their wonderful durability, are here in beautiful patterns and all sizes, the 9x12 ft. size selling at $40.

Body Brussels Rugs in colors and styles that lend themselves to any decorative scheme you may have in mind; extra quality, always dependable, immensely popular; 9x12 ft. size at $30.50.

Hardwick Wilton Rugs—One of the most perfectly woven of all, finest and closest pile, in patterns and colorings that are sure to win your admiration, in the 9x12 size, at $42.50.

Axminster Rugs in rich Oriental patterns and colorings, in any wanted size; the 9x12 feet size, at prices ranging from $19.50 to $27.50.

Wilton Velvet Rugs, Smyrna Rugs, Tapestry Rugs and the Summer Rugs are in remarkable variety at the most reasonable price.

Oriental Rugs—the only worth while line in town.

Every kind of Carpeting and Matting.

Spring Clothes FOR BOYS

Every mother of a boy and every big boy who looks after himself will be interested in our early showing of Spring Suits and Top Coats.

We are particularly proud of some of our specialties, one of which is an All Wool Suit in a natty double breasted style, made of cloths of a quality seldom seen in suits under $7.50, and with each suit an extra pair of knickerbocker trousers; for boys of 7 to 18, which we sell at only $4.98.

This suit will be a feature thruout the season and we are sure it will not be excelled by any other house at this low price.

Another specialty will be our Boys' All Wool Suits with two pair of knickerbocker trousers for only $3.98. These suits are cut double breasted and made of fancy mixtures in handsome grays and rich brownish and tannish effects. If they were sold with only one pair of trousers they would be fairly priced at $3.98 per suit, but we give you two pair at this price with each suit.

Children's Dresses

Children's Dresses, of Lawn and Dimity; in Russian, French Waist and Mother Hubbard styles, high and low neck; long, short and kimono sleeves; trimmed with Baby Irish pattern embroidery, lace insertions, tucking, beading and ribbon; plain hem, tucked or embroidery skirt; ribbon rosettes; sizes 2 to 5 years; for $1.98.

Children's Dresses—Latest novelties, including the hobble skirt; made of Gingham, Lawn, Poplin and Chambray; new style sleeves—kimono effects; prettily trimmed with bias banding braid and hand embroidered; in pink, cadet, light blue; checked and striped materials; sizes to 5 years; at 75c upward to $2.98.

OUR ANNUAL SALE OF THE FAMED

Burt $4 and $4.50 Shoes and Oxfords at $2.85

This is the events hundreds have awaited with great expectancy. Some have wondered whether we would be able this year to repeat our past sales of the Edwin C. Burt shoes, and we are glad to gratify them with a finer, bigger sale than those that have gone before.

2,000 Pairs of these very well-known and much-liked shoes—all new, fresh, perfect goods, intended for this season's selling go into this sale.

There are Patent Leather Shoes, Gunmental and Calf-skin Shoes and Black Vici Kid-skin Shoes—Both high and low cuts, in various heel and toe shapes; welted soles; all sizes and widths.

They are the Regular $4 and $4.50 Shoes—Sold at prices all over the country.

You have never picked from a handsomer lot of shoes than this. They are full of style and beauty, are splendidly finished and are aristocratic shoes in every sense; yet we offer these $4 and $5 Shoes and Oxfords for only $2.85

Finest Hats, of Course

ALSO TRIMMED HATS AT $4.75

The finest of hats, of course; more than you'll see anywhere, but we've made special preparations for this week for an unprecedented showing of our most popular-priced hats in conjunction with the Formal Opening Display of the most superb creations we import or that our milliners can produce.

It is because so many people select hats at this popular price that we pay so much attention to them, and try season after season, month after month, to better them, to give more style and beauty and quality for the money, and we feel that we have made great progress along these lines since no other store produces hats at an equally low price that begin to compare with these.

There will be hundreds of styles ready for you this week, and whether you choose a hat for dress, for everyday service or for filling in between seasons you will find many styles here in many colors that will please you immensely.

It is the wonderment of all that we are able to produce such beautiful hats, many of them copies of much more expensive models, at the little price of $4.75

At $7.75 and $9.75 we have other lines of trimmed hats that are also very popular. In these we use somewhat finer materials, and some of them are more elaborately trimmed and are exceptional value for the money.

A Desperate Game

By JOHN K. LEYS,

Copyright, 1903, by John K. Leys.

"I am very much obliged to you," said Guy, surprised and pleased by the baronet's good natured courtesy. "Surely," Guy thought to himself, "the man cannot be altogether bad. He has at least the grace to know when he is beaten and is above the meanness of harboring petty spite."

At that moment dinner was announced, and the two men passed side by side into the dining room. Sir Rufus made a capital host. With a man like this sitting opposite him the evening passed swiftly with Guy, and very pleasantly. After dinner and a glass of old madeira came coffee, which was placed before the master of the house on a small tray. Sir Rufus poured it out both for himself and his guest.

"You take milk?" he said, with a look at Guy. Guy said "Yes," and Sir Rufus poured in the coffee and the hot milk at the same time. "And sugar, of course?" he added, dropping in two or three small lumps as he spoke.

Jorrocks handed the tray to Guy, who took a lump of sugar from the sugar bowl and dropped it into his cup.

"There is sugar in it already, sir," said Jorrocks, and Guy, who did not like oversweet coffee, began fishing for one of the lumps of sugar with his teaspoon.

"I don't think you'll find it too sweet," said Sir Rufus. He was frowning slightly, apparently annoyed at being deprived of the attention of his only listener for so trifling a cause. By this time, however, Guy had lifted out one of the lumps of sugar and deposited it in his saucer.

"Bring Mr. Lorimer a clean saucer," said Sir Rufus to the butler rather sharply. Guy protested that it was not necessary.

"Oh, nothing is so unpleasant as a mess of melting sugar in one's saucer," said the baronet. "But what were we talking about? Ah, yes; the impressionist school. Well, my chief quarrel with them is that they seem incapable of saying a plain thing in a plain way, and are cramped to the lips with affectation; yet, after all, we owe them a great deal. If art is to make any progress, if it is to be a living thing, there must be periods when accepted conventions are discarded."

Guy sat dutifully listening, his eyes fixed on his host's face. He had, without thinking what he was doing, swallowed the cup of coffee and was toying with his teaspoon in an absent minded way.

Suddenly his hand became rigid, and a cold thrill passed down his spine. He had unthinkingly pressed the half dissolved lump of sugar with the back of the teaspoon, expecting to crunch it easily, but instead of crunching the sugar the teaspoon stuck in it—stuck in it so that it could not be withdrawn. Sir Rufus had put something besides sugar into the coffee.

It was well for Guy that he had acquired during his practice at the bar the art of preserving a wooden expression of face while he was feeling disappointment, hope, fear or some other emotion. This command of feature stood him in good stead now. His eyes remained fixed on Sir Rufus' face while he was satisfying himself that his first impression had been a true one. This thing that he was touching was not sugar, but some glutinous substance like jelly. He quitted the teaspoon, threw himself back in his chair and allowed Jorrocks to carry away the empty cup and saucer without so much as glancing at it. He forced himself to appear interested, but all the while the thought of his heart was: "This cannot be an accident. Is it merely an attempt to drug me, or does he mean murder?"

It was plain to Guy that even if Sir Rufus' object was merely to give him a narcotic his action was scarcely less sinister and dangerous than if he had intended murder, for his aim could only be to render him helpless while he carried out some dark design against Eva. Now Guy felt comparatively safe. The chances were that it was not poison, but some drug intended to make him sleep till late next day, that he had swallowed, and he had taken but half of the intended quantity. The best thing, he decided, would be to say nothing about the queer find he had made in his coffee cup, but to leave his host under the impression that he had imbibed the whole of the drug that had been put into the coffee.

Apart from any narcotic, the combined influence of the long journey, his anxiety about Eva, the hot fire, food and wine were quite enough to make him feel drowsy, and in the course of half an hour he found great difficulty in keeping awake.

Sir Rufus, seeing this, asked him with apparent good nature whether he would not like to go to bed, and he at once said that he would. Sir Rufus rang the bell and confided his guest to the care of Jorrocks, saying that he had better not disturb Mr. Lorimer in the morning, but leave him to have his sleep out in peace. To Guy's ears this sounded as an additional menace.

It seemed to Guy that he became sleepier every moment. He positively stumbled in going upstairs, and when he reached his room his first impulse was to throw himself, dressed as he was, upon the bed and sink at once into forgetfulness.

But he resisted this impulse manfully. As soon as the butler's back was turned he shot the bolt which he found on the door, and then, having carried the candle to a safe place, he drew aside the heavy curtains, pulled up the blind and threw open the window.

The chill night wind blowing freely into the room somewhat revived him, and he leaned out over the window sill with a sense of new strength. Far away below, perhaps forty or fifty feet, as far as he could judge, lay the rocks on which the castle was built, and another fifty feet below the waters of the lake beat against them ceaselessly.

The ancient builders who had raised the castle walls had followed the rocky floor right to the verge. There was no way of walking round the building—no space at the foot of the wall between it and the precipice. Guy could have dropped a pebble from his window clean down into the water. After a little it occurred to him that the scenery might be as conveniently observed from the sofa, or from the floor. Then he decided that he would not sit down lest he should go to sleep, but in spite of this resolution he soon sank to his knees. He made a desperate effort to rise to his feet—failed, rolled over and lay stark and motionless as one dead.

He awoke some hours later, with a dim consciousness that somewhere, very far off, he had heard the sound of shrieks and cries that were like cries for help. He listened, but could hear nothing, and yet the sensation of having heard such cries haunted his mind with a persistency that would not listen to denial. He felt languid and half sick.

With some difficulty he sat up on the floor, and then he said to himself, "I must try to find out whether there has been really any one crying for help." The next thought was, "What if it was Eva?" And this thought made him drag himself to his feet and stumble toward the door.

WILL INTRODUCE BIBLE IN ARABIAN SCHOOLS

Rev John Van Ess who addressed the congregation of Trinity Reformed church on Sunday evening on "Arabia" will return to his field of operations some time during the coming August. At present Mr. Van Ess is taking a post graduate course at Princeton University preparatory to opening public schools in that far off land.

Among the concessions obtained by Mr. Van Ess for his proposed educational movement is the introduction of the Bible in the curriculum of the schools which he proposes to open. He has the permision of the Turkish government for this innovation and the results appear to promise largely.

In speaking of Dr. Harrison, the medical missionary sent out by Trinity Reformed church, Mr. Van Ess said: "Dr Harrison is all wool and a yard wide. He has accomplished wonders among the people with whom and for whom he has worked. The last I saw of him he was bound inland into an undiscovered country and carried with him his medical outfit."

Mr. Van Ess's talk on Sunday evening aroused enthusiasm among the congregation and it is not to be doubed that he will be able to secure the $50,000 he needs to build the schools he wants to build before his departure next August. He will have his headquarters at Busrah in Arabia.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

If you long for a new sensation take a trip in a dirigible balloon over Switzerland with Lyman H. Howe at the Plainfield theatre tonight. You won't suffer from "airsickness" nor be in danger of a fatal "drop," and yet experience an exhilarating thrill which is unlike any you have ever known. Then, too, you will have a ride on the swiftest motor boat ever built—the Ursula, of 800 h. p.; a tour through London, Indo-China, and the Gorges De L'Ardeche, France; witness the construction and launch of an ocean palace, the White Star Liner, "Olympic;" spectacular demolition of buildings by dynamite in Messina; landing pasengers in a rough sea at Tunis; a dangerous, though bloodless bull fight, in Spain; and many other features of equal interest.

F. A. Wade, in presenting "The Time, the Place and the Girl," which will be produced at the Plainfield theatre on Saturday matinee and night, offers us a musical comedy production that is a distinct departure from all others that have been presented in this city. "The Time, the Place and the Girl" was taken from an actual occurance, the scenes being produced from photographs around which the story was written. "Johnny Hicks," a slangy, good-natured and honorable young gambler, is away from the old stereotyped stage character, very original and refined, and above all, highly pleasing. Molly Kelly, the trained nurse, Piedro, the organ grinder, Willie, the spoiled child and the coal heaver, hold up the comedy end of the play. The chorus comes from the La Salle school, long noted for its "Broilers" and having a reputation of being the greatest training school for chorus girls in America. The cast in its entirety has been carefully selected. The equipment is complete in every detail, the stage being stripped of everything before the arrival of the company to make room for the massive scenery.

Waldron—Gunther.

Announcement was made this morning of the wedding on Sunday last of Charles Waldron, of East Second street, to Miss Pauline Gunther, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gunther, of the Netherwood district. The ceremony was performed by Rev. George Bowers, pastor of the Methodist church at Mt. Horeb. Mr. and Mrs. Waldron will spend their honeymoon at Spring lake in May.

—The Yama Yama Club will give its annual dance on Thursday night. Special musical talent has been engaged for the occasion.

DR. DEWEY'S TALK

Columbia University Man on Phsychology and Philosphy of Equal Suffrage.

HE CHAMPIONS THE CAUSE.

"To Secure Franchise It Is Necessary for All Classes of Women to Work Together" He Declares.

Professor John Dewey, of Columbia University, at a largely attended meeting of the Equal Suffrage League of Plainfield and North Plainfield, held in the league's headquarters in the Frost building, last evening, lectured on "The Phsycology and Philosophy of Equal Suffrage." The rooms of the league were comfortably filled and after Dr. Dewey's address light refreshments were served.

The speaker in opening his address said that he had found that women students had always been quite as apt and as able to handle abstract subjects as men and that not infrequently he was impressed with their peculiar ability to even supass men in the understanding of these subjects. He recalled that a generation ago women were told of the evil results of neglecting the health and home and that the same argument was used today and that the two arguments are analogous. He dwelt upon the point that the chief obstacle today as then was human inertia.

Twenty years ago women were not suffragists, but today education in municipal housekeeping, health and sanitation are the foremost questions confronting them. "Surely these are quesions," he said, "as of great interest to women as to men and women as well as men are as able to decide them. Today there is a feeling not alone among women, but among men as well that women ought to have something besides a passive voice in the management of the huge affairs of State and nation. Where a few years ago there were only a few women dedicated to the work of securing the franchise for women, today the movement is universal and we have among the greatest advocates of the measure such women as Mrs. Cushing, president of the Consumers' League; Mrs. Alexander, whose reputation is national and Margaret Sangster, whom the whole world knows as a woman of singular ability and a keen insight into timely questions.

"In order to secure the franchise it is necessary for all classes of women to work together in harmony of purpose. A woman with all her influence, without a vote cannot go beyond a certain point and she is thus working under a severe handicap. Many factors enter into the question all of which are vital to the real woman and which bear strongly on the future of our country. Wherever the franchise has been granted it has been found to work to the advantage of the community and men today cannot but admit that women are as erudite in their study and comprehension of vital questions as they are."

Dr. Dewey's remarks were received with long, continuous applause.

MRS. READ PRESIDENT OF WOMEN'S SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, held yesterday afternoon, was largely attended and the annual reports showed the society to be in a vigorous and flourishing condition. Over $1,200 was collected and distributed during the year.

Dr. C. C. Walker, a medical missionary, whose field of labor is in Bangkok, Siam, delivered an interesting address, telling of the amgnificent work that is being done among Siamese. Dr. Walker said that the natives have become so much interested in the work that two of the well to do men have built hospitals for the poor and all the natives are taking an active part in the work. Their contributions to the medical work amounts to a splendid sum every year.

Tea was served at the conclusion of the meeting. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. E. G. Read; vice-presidents, Mrs. I. W. Cochran, Mrs. John Gray Foster, Mrs. J. S. Zelie; secretary, Mrs. O. G. Dale; treasurer, Mrs. William Hoyt; superintendent of collections, Miss Julia Scribner; secretary of literature, Mrs. Isaac Field.

Pastors to Exchange.

Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, pastor of the First Baptist church, and Rev. Gabriel Reid Maguire, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist church, will exchange Sunday morning, and in the evening the pastors will occupy their own pulpits. Mr. Maguire's evening theme will be "Looking at Things Until You See Them."

'HOSPITAL SUNDAY' NETTED ABOUT $1,600

The report of the Treasurer Julius E. Erickson, at the meeting of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, indicated a substantial increase in the "Hospital Sunday" collection, estimated at about $1,600, although all the churches have not yet been heard from. It is hoped that this may be brought up to $2,000 next year. The treasurer also reported a special donation which is greatly appreciated, being for the purpose of endowing a bed for one year; it coming from the Ladies' Auxiliary of Trinity Commandary, No. 17, Knights Templars.

The governors directed a public audit for the fiscal year ending June 1, and also discussed the advisability of revising the by-laws of the institution.

The medical report for the month showed 100 patients treated in the wards and private rooms; fifty-five being discharged cured, and six improved. Five patients died. There were 1,002 total patients' days treatments, and 149 dispensary visits. Nine patients were treated in the tuberculosis pavilion, and one was discharged. There were twenty ambulance calls during the month.

Replies from the circulars requesting new regular subscriptions, it was reported, are coming in slowly, and it is hoped that residents of the city, who do not as yet subscribe to this charity will send their names in to the treasurer.

"FIRST AID" COURSE NEARING THE CLOSE

Miss Josephine Hughes, superintendent of Muhlenberg Hospital, lectured on "Practical Nursing" before the "first aid" class at the Y. W. C. A. yesterday afternoon. She was assisted by two nurses from the hospital and a little girl from the gymnasium class as "patient." Miss Hughes explained present-day methods of caring for the sick room and with the aid of the nurses showed exactly how a little knowledge of some important things makes otherwise difficult tasks very easy. Miss Hughes will go further into the subject before the evening class Thursday night and the afternoon class next Tuesday.

The "practical nursing" lecture will conclude the series and the examinations will be held Wednesday and Thursday of next week. Seventy-five members of the two classes will be tested on the information they have derived. The Red Cross Society "first aid" department, under the auspices of which the course has been conducted, has appointed Drs. F. E. Dubois, Frederick J. Hughes and Edward S. Krans to assume charge of the examinations.

RECOGNITION SERVICE FOR REV. F. L. GREEN

Rev. Frederic L. Greene will be formally recognized as pastor of Hope chapel at a service of introduction to be held at the chapel tomorrow night, in which several ministers will take part. The program follows:

Voluntary, anthem, choir; invocation and Lord's Prayer; Scripture reading, Rev. J. O. McKelvey, of Warren chapel; prayer, Rev. F. D. Tildon; hymn, statements and questions, Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, pastor of Crescent Avenue church; charge to the pastor, Rev. Dr. Zelie; charge to the people, Rev. Dr. Charles E. Herring; hymn, welcome from other church, Rev. Charles L. Goodrich; prayer, Rev. Frederic L. Greene, hymn, benediction, postlude.

Following the service of introduction a reception will be tendered to Rev. and Mrs. Frederic L. Greene in the church parlors, to which all will be invited.

Acquitted of Assault.

When arraigned before Judge De-Meza in the city court this morning Enrico Porcello, the Richmond street barber, who was accused by De Nunzio Vico of assaulting him yesterday morning in the barber shop of Joseph Tumolo, on Watchung avenue, was acquitted of the charge and the complaint dismissed by the court. There was no evidence to show that any assault had been committed.

Dennis Carney's Funeral.

The funeral of Dennis Carney, who died in Muhlenberg hospital, yesterday afternoon, after a long illness, will be held at his late home on Cottage place tomorrow morning at 8:30 and in St. Mary's church at 9 o'clock. Burial will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

U.S. EXPRESS CO. NOT AFFECTED BY STRIKE

The strike now going on in which the employees of the Adams Express Co., of New York, are involved will not have any effect upon the other companies, according to press dispatches received this afternoon. Since the settlement made on March 3 by the United States and the other big companies, there has been no friction among the men excepting the Adams employees.

Wilson Frederick, local agent of the United Express Co., said this afternoon that the only effect the strike had on the company he represents was to increase the volume of business being done all along the line. There is no danger of a sympathetic strike here nor elsewhere so far as he knows. In fact the agreement now holding the employees of the other companies together is still in effect and no trouble of any kind is anticipated.

ASSEMBLY FAVORS PENSIONS FOR POLICE

The police pension bill introduced in the House at Trenton, by Assemblyman Calvin E. Brodhead, of this city, passed the Assembly yesterday. It provides for the retirement of policemen after twenty years of service and after having reached the age of sixty, on half pay. After twenty-five years of service same retirement at the age of fifty-five

A pension is also provided for widows and children.

The bill will now go to the State Senate. As it contains no referendum clause, however, it is doubtful that the governor will sign it.

ODD COINCIDENCE IN RECEIPT OF LETTERS

By a strange coincidence, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Reynolds, of Church street, each received a letter by the same mail yesterday and each one was informed of the death of a relative. The letter directed to Mrs. Reynolds was from Perth Amboy and told of the demise of her cousin, Mrs. Samuel Skirm, who passed away after a brief illness. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Reynolds' information also related to the death of a cousin, Mrs. Sarah Johnson, of Lakewood. She died Monday and will be buried Friday afternoon.

The letters to the local relatives posted half a day apart but chanced to reach the Plainfield office at the same time. Both missives were handed to Mrs. Reynolds by the carrier yesterday afternoon.

TUBERCULOSIS CAMP PLANS READY SOON

Freeholder J. Hervey Doane, chairman of the county committee on tuberculosis work, which has in charge the establishment of the camp on the Fullerton farm at Scotch Plains, has received word that within a few days Architect C. W. Oakley, of Elizabeth, will have his preliminary plans ready for inspection. It is expected that within a short time it will be possible to ask for bids for work to be done on the farm and by next fall the committee hopes to be ready to receive persons afflicted with tuberculosis.

The committee has engaged Thos. Rogers as a farmer and he is now on the farm getting everything in readiness to raise produce there next summer. The pond on the farm has also been stocked with 110 large bass obtained from the State.

The dwelling house on the farm is in perfect condition. It has twelve rooms, all improvements, hardwood floors and every convenience and will require practically no changes. There is a feeling among some of the members of the board that the county should purchase the Duyckinck farm adjoining, as a suitable place for putting the county prisoners to work, instead of keeping them in the jail at Elizabeth, and it is possible that some plan of this kind may be adopted. This idea is advocated by the State Charities Aid and efforts are being made to have it introduced in the county. In some States the plan has been found to work satisfactorily and the results better than expected.

IT'S PARKER FIELD

Athletic Ground Named in Honor of Lessor to be Opened May 30.

FREE TO GENERAL PUBLIC.

Organizations Using the Field May "Pass the Hat"—The Playground Commission Has Charge of It.

The new athletic field and playground on Randolph road adjoining Woodland avenue will be known as Parker Field in honor of A. McClean Parker. Mr. Parker expressed a desire to the Common Council that it be called Stillman Field, in memory of Dr. Stillman, but the Playground Commission by a resolution passed previous to Mr. Parker's communication to the Council, decided upon the name of Parker Field, and Mr. Parker has since consented to the request. The date of the opening will be determined largely by the weather.

Mr. Parker will soon complete the grading; the infield will then be reseeded and completed. A building containing lavatories for both sexes will be erected on the grounds. Some weeks will be required for this work, and then the Commission will undertake the task of preparing the field for actual use. The new turf will be a chief factor in permitting the use of the field. The formal opening will probably take place on Decoration Day, May 30.

At a recent meeting of the Playground Commission the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That no charge for admission to the Parker Field be made at any time. That organizations using the Field, with the permission of the Commission, will be allowed to collect voluntary contributions from those present."

This action was taken by the Playground Commission in order that various athletic organizations may have the benefit of the athletic track, baseball and football grounds, and that those organizations which desire to collect contributions from their friends to help pay expenses, may do so.

As a public playground under the control of the City of Plainfield, and supported by the taxpayers, however, it seems proper that no one be denied admission to this field at any time.

The Commission will give due information as to where and when schedules may be filed, and how permission may be obtained by various local athletic organizations desiring to use the field during the coming season.

The Playground Commission which also has in charge the playgrounds in the public school yards will have charge of Parker Field.

CANADIAN CANON TO PREACH HERE

Grace church has placed itself in a position of prominence in regard to its services to the community in general. Since the beginning of Lent, this position of usefulness has been more particularly emphasized in the distinguished orators which it has called into requisition for the Sunday services. The different lists at the various churches in the East will show that none have a more notable list of preachers than those who have spoken in the Episcopal church here. Evidently no means has been spared that the most helpful men may be presented to the consideration of our community.

The Rev. Cannon Almon Abbott, of Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, will be the preacher on Sunday next. Though he is one of the youngest, still he is one of the most distinguished preachers at present in the Canadian church. He is a Canadian by birth, educated in the city of Montreal, where his marked ability received the recognition when he was assistant at the Church of St. James, the Apostle. Dr. Abbott was unanimously chosen a year or two since to succeed Canon Bland as vicar of Christ Church Cathedral, in the city of Hamilton, in the diocese of Niagara. He was subsequently advanced to an honorary canon of the Cathedral.

Canon Abbott will preach both morning and afternoon and at both services a very cordial welcome will be given to the public in general, whether they are members of the Episcopal church or not.

Rev. E. S. Randolph to Preach.

Rev. E. S. Randolph, one of the leading Methodist ministers of Philadelphia, and a son of Rev. Dr. B. F. Randolph, of this city, district superintendent of the Elizabeth district, will preach at the First M. E. church, Sunday morning.

THEODORE RUNYON IN A CRITICAL CONDITION

Theodore Runyon, of Putnam avenue, who has been a deacon in the Park Avenue Baptist church since its organization in 1876, is critically ill at his home. He has been in a semi-conscious state for several days. Mr. Runyon is an only brother to A. M. Runyon, of Madison avenue, and for many years held a responsible position with the Mutual Benefit Insurance Company, of Newark. He was retired by the concern about two months ago.

Miss Adella Runyon, Mr. Runyon's eldest daughter, who has been spending the winter in Cuba, was summoned home last week because of her father's illness. She left Havana Friday morning and came north via Knight Key, Fla., by train, making a record run to Plainfield. She reached home early Sunday evening and would have arrived in the afternoon but for the train being four hours late.

PLAINFIELD W.C.T.U. COMMENDS MAYOR

The Plainfield W. C. T. U. has sent Mayor G. W. V. Moy the following letter:

"The members of the W. C. T. U., of Plainfield, appreciate and commend your efforts to enforce the law in this city and wish you success in your endeavor to make Plainfield a clean city."

An address on "How Prohibition Has Helped Maine," will be the subject of a discourse at the meeting tomorrow afternoon at which Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson will preside.

The union will hold a sale of home-made cake at its rooms on April 7.

ASSEMBLY DEFEATS ACKERMAN MEASURE

In the House at Trenton yesterday the bill to permit non-residents to take civil examination in the State for positions where technical knowledge is required and where there are not enough available resident candidates, was defeated. This measure was introduced at the request of President Ackerman, of the Senate and is amendment of the civil service law. The bill had passed the Senate.

Assemblyman Lloyd Thompson, of Union, explained the bill and made a strong plea for it. Mr. Boettner, of Essex, opposed the bill on the ground that it would open the door for all kinds of abuses. Mr. Thompson changed his vote to nay in the hope of having the bill considered favorably later.

YES, YOU ARE YOUR BROTHER'S KEEPER

Responding to the appeal for volunteers in the Dollar Army to wage a campaign against the great white plague, still another good hearted woman has enlisted in the cause. That makes five, four of whom are women. Altogether twelve are needed to take charge of the work as mapped out, and therefore seven are yet needed. Will you be one of the seven?

The Dollar Army scheme is in the interest of the Plainfield Anti-Tuberculosis League. It is the "year and the day" idea—not an endless chain. This paper represents the year and twelve volunteer to represent as many months. These twelve are the generals and have full charge in their respective divisions. Each month contributes one dollar and recruits four persons to represent the weeks in a month. They are the colonels and in addition to contributing one dollar apiece, each appoints seven captains representing the days in a week, who likewise contribute one dollar each.

Consumption is called a disease of the masses because of its great prevalence among all classes of people. The first records of it date back to the fifth century before Christ, or about 2,500 years ago.

In 1865 Villimin, a French physician, demonstrated beyond doubt that tuberculosis could be transmitted from one individual to another. This was verified by other famous physicians, until the disease was generally branded as infectious. In 1882 the specific germ which causes consumption was discovered by the great German scientist Robert Koch.

STOLEN GUN LEADS TO JUSTICES' COURT

Al Galloway, of North Plainfield, was arraighed before Justice Snape in the borough court this morning, charged by Jacob Voehl, of Somerset street, with obtaining money under false pretenses. The complainant was sustained and Galloway was ordered to return the money, $14, together with the costs of action.

The case is an aftermath of the arrest of John Polen, of Jennings lane, for several burglaries about six weeks ago. The particular act that led to his undoing was breaking and entering Fred Martin's bungalow on Johnston's drive. He was sentenced to Rahway Reformatory on this charge. In securing evidence against him, Chief Marshal Weiss learned that Polen had also robbed the summer home of Charles Neier, on Johnston's drive, securing among other things a fine Marlin "pump" gun valued at $75.

Polen told Chief Weiss the weapon had been sold to Galloway. When the later was located he said he had disposed of it to Voehl for $14 and the police secured it from him.

Voehl declared that he had been particular to ask where Galloway purchased the gun and was told at Griffin's hardware store. When he learned that this was a fabrication he asked for the return of his money Galloway refused to reimburse him and the action in Justice Snape's court resulted.

SOME SEATS UNSOLD FOR COLLEGE BENEFIT

The committee having in charge the entertainment which will be given in the Plainfield thearte on Friday evening for the benefit of Mt. St. Mary College announce that they would be glad if those who have reserved seats would call at the theatre box office and get their tickets. Almost the entire orchestra has been sold and but a few of the seats of the balcony are left.

The various donations which have been received by the Sisters of Mercy have shown that the attendance at the big benefit will not be made up of Plainfielders alone. Elizabeth, Rahway, Newark, Paterson, Orange, East Orange, Somerville, Bound Brook and many other cities and towns have been heard from and a crowded house is sure to greet the artists who will appear.

The ushers who regularly look after the seating of patrons of the theatre have volunteered their services for Friday night and, as usual every seat holder will receive the customary courteous treatment.

POVERTY GENERALLY DUE TO STRONG DRINK

The Men's Club of the Congregational church put itself on record last evening as favoring local option and a draft of the resolution which will be signed by the members will be forwarded to Governor Woodrow Wilson. This action is the result of inquiry into the liquor traffic and its effects upon communities.

The occasion was the regular monthly meeting of the club and was made decidely interesting to the large number present by an address given by Rev. Ernest K. Brown, of Dunellen, whose topic was "Men Who are Down and Out." Years of experience in the work of the Bowery mission enabled the speaker to bring facts to the notice of the club that were both informing and moving.

Mr. Brown described the different types of men who appear in the mission; told of the methods used to help them and related instances of remarkable conversions. It was no surprise to the members to learn that 80 per cent. of the men who seek help at the mission come to destitution through the drink habit, but it was somewhat surprising to hear that 75 per cent. of them were American born.

The club listened to Mr. Brown's talk with deep interest and the subject continued informallly with questions and discussion in the social hour which followed.

One new member was elected last evening at the business session and following the address light refreshments were served.

A Gambling Joint.

John Scruggs, charged by the police with allowing gambling to be done in his pool room at 525 West Third street, changed his plea this morning and threw himself upon the mercy of the court. He was fined $10 which he promptly paid. Isaac Byram, the partner in the poolroom will be arraigned for sentence tomorrow morning.

COMMISSION GOV'T

Animated Discussion in Senate Chamber Yesterday Promises Early Action.

SENATOR LEAVITT'S MEASURE.

Upheld by Delegates from Thirty-two Cities and Towns—Favorable Action Expected—John Ulrich's Speech.

Representing the Chamber of Commerce, a committee consisting of John Ulrich, A. E. Force, W. S. Angleman, Charles J. McNab and William Jeffery, attended the conference with a joint committee of the Senate and House at Trenton, yesterday, in the interest of the bill which has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Leavitt, of Mercer county, permitting cities to establish the commission form of municipal government. Representatives from thirty-two cities and towns in the State were there and enthusiastically supported Senator Leavitt's bill. While there was some discussion as to including the initiative, referendum and recall in the present bill, at the end of the many speeches there was but one dissenting voice.

In the chamber, Senator Leavitt presided and explained the text of the measure he had introduced. With a few exceptions, mainly small details, the bill was approved by the delegates. The presence of such a large delegation of men showed the result of the propaganda that has been carried on by the Civic Federation. The federation had invited every city and town in the State to participate in the movement and the result was gratifying to even the most enthusiastic.

When the conference was over the feeling pervaded that the bill would be favorably reported by the joint committee and that with this approval the commission government plan would soon become a fact in certain of the more important cities. Paterson and Atlantic City delegates seemed to be the leaders in the movement for better municipal government and they made themselves heard forcibly on the favorable side of the question. Some of the details of Senator Leavitt's bill were critisised, but the alterations will finally meet with the unanimous approval of the conferees.

Mr. Ulrich was elected as spokesman of the Plainfield delegation and when he obtained the floor his speech was heard with deep interest. In part he spoke as follows:

"The city of Plainfield which I have the honor to represent here through our Chamber of Commerce, has and always has had a good form of government. Our affairs have been so honestly and so well conducted since we have been incorporated as a city that we have never had a single defalcation or the loss of a dollar through a dishonest official, demonstrating therefore, at least, that our government has been an honest government. But good as our government has been, and is now, we of Plainfield, believe in a better form of government or the best of government that can possibly be divised by the human mind or by political genius.

"While we are not an unhappy or discontented community under our present municipal system of government we nevertheless are of the opinion and faith that a commission form of government would be better applicable to our conditions and needs and work in a more effective way. We believe that a municipal government because it is a corporation, should be governed as most corporations are controlled where direct responsibility is placed in the hands of a few directors or commissioners who should be properly compensated and be responsible directly to the people and where there should be an application of modern business methods to the conduct of municipal affairs. The lines of demarcation between a commission form of government and the old ward representation plan is very clear and pronounced, and does not make it difficult for the average citizen to comprehend the differentiate between these two systems.

"Under a commission form of government as contemplated the business of the city will be divided into five general departments at the head of each will be one commissioner who will be held personally responsible for the work of his department, subject, of course, to the general supervision of the entire commission. Under the ward plan there is no specific responsibility on the part of a member of the Common Council for any branch of the city's interest of business. Personal and direct individual or official responsibility is one of the better features I take it of the proposed new system. The commission government, for example, would require one commissioner to

"The Time, the Place and the Girl," which will be the attraction at the Plainfield theatre on Saturday next, matinee and night, is the result of the collaboration of Joseph E. Howard, Will M. Hough and Frank R. Adams. The combining of a story that can be understood with music of the whistling sort, numerous "girly" effects all done in attractive settings, are the pivotal features of the play.

Portions of the music of "Bright Eyes," Joseph M. Gaites now musical play by the authors of "Three Twins," is so elaborate that a special orchestra is required for it. This being the case it is announced that an augmented orchestra of twenty pieces will be used at the performance of the play at the Plainfield theatre for one night only, Monday, March 20.

Local theatregoers have a treat in store for them next Tuesday night March 21, in the production here of "The Spendthrift," the latest play by Porter Emerson Brown, who wrote "A Fool There Was." This drama proved one of the real dramatic successes of the year in New York where it remained for five months at the Hudson theatre, delighting large audiences of New Yorkers and visitors to the metropolis and defying summer heat in New York which drove all else but the lightest of musical comedies and roof garden shows to cover. The entire New York production of this play, which was afterwards taken to Chicago for a run, will come here intact.

JUDGE DUNGAN TO QUIT REGIMENT MARCH 25.

It was announced yesterday by Judge Nelson Y. Dungan that he would retire from the colonelcy of the Second Regiment, on March 25.

The appointment of the colonel as Judge of the Circuit Court takes effect on March 24. The fourth anniversary of Mr. Dungan's election as commander of the Second Regiment occurs March 25 and it has been arranged to have the resignation take effect as of that date.

Curfew for Somerville.

A curfew bell, warning all children under the age of fifteen years to leave the streets and go to their homes at 9 o'clock each night, will be rung in Somerville hereafter. The Borough Council passed an ordinance to this effect Monday night after strong appeals had been made in favor of the law by Rev. Stockton Cramer, of the First Reformed church, and Rev. C. C. Silvester, rector of St. John's Episcopal church, who represented the ministers and church people of the borough.

A Helpful Hint.

When slapstick actors make a hit
Of aid there is no lack.
The drummer does his little bit,
Uncoils a mighty whack.

The scheme is always helpful, bo,
To have upon one's staff.
Instanter all the people know
Exactly when to laugh.

It might help Ibsen drama some
To let the cymbals slam,
Or make a fuss upon the drum,
With every epigram.

BASEBALL.

Umpire Bob Hart, who comes to the Eastern League this year, while in a reminiscent mood recently told some stories on himself and others. Rorty and Jere Connell, the New Haven player, figured in this one: As every one knows, Jere jaws a bit in a ball game.

Bob told of a game in Springfield a few seasons ago when Rorty chased Connell out of the game.

Then Hugh missed connections with the box office and failed to get his money for umpiring that day. He had counted on having this coin to take him home, besides feeding him.

On the way down the street he met Connell, who began to do a dance around the umpire and tell him what he would do to him.

"Oh, shut up, Jere, and lend me $5," said Rorty. "Sure," said Jere. And the very next day Connell was fined $5 by Rorty.

Lee Tannehill led his detachment of the White Sox against the Texas Leaguers Monday and was victorious by a score of 8 to 1. Waco piled up enough hits to make a better showing in the run column, but classy fielding beat them at the dangerous turns. Against Young the Texans were effective with the stick, but on the paths they were routed.

GOLF.

Work will begin shortly on a new course at Macon, Ga. The idea is to lay out eighteen holes, but put only nine in commission at first.

It is reported that the city authorities of Liverpool, England, have arranged for putting practice in one of the parks. Provided there was sufficient interest this could easily be given a trial in this country.

In the list of dates sent out from the Metropolitan Golf Association headquarters recently, August 24, 25, 26 and 27 appeared in connection with the time set for the Brooklyn-Forest Park tournament. The event in question will consist of only three days. August 27 is Sunday. The New York Golf Club tournament dates are August 31, September 1 and 2.

Women's $25 Suits

The best $25 tailored suit ever shown in Newark—a pretty strong statement, but one that we feel justified in making because we know just how good this line is and how strongly it will appeal to you.

Dozens of styles to select from. Plain tailored suits; pleasing models in fancy and trimmed suits. Excellent serges; black, of course, and all the fascinating colors of Spring; the popular chalk line effects; pretty striped, checked and novelty worsteds. Newest ideas in skirt effects. All copies of the very highest priced models.

We were enthusiastic over our $25 suits last season, but we are doubly enthusiastic this year. We felt last year that it would be impossible to improve upon the styles and workmanship at this price, but this season's suits are so splendidly made; the materials are so exceptionally good and the styles are so wonderful that there is no comparison. By all means the best line of tailored suits in Newark at.....$25.00

Excellent Suits at 17.50

We have tried to make our $17.50 line as strong proportionately as the $25.00. We think we have succeeded. Thoroughly dependable suits in every way up to our high standard. The very newest styles. Made of serges of good quality, in black and fashionable Spring colors; new stripes and handsome mixed fabrics—some plain tailored, others in pretty sailor collar effects; all sizes $17.50

ROBERT CLARK JR. TO RETIRE ON MAY 1

Wharton & Company, hat manufacturers, whose big plant is at 142 Commerce street, Newark, has disposed of its entire business to a Danbury concern, and on May 1, Robert Clark, Jr., of North Plainfield, the senior partner, will retire from business. He and Mrs Clark have been living in Newark during the past winter and will return to their home on Jackson avenue.

Edward O. Clark, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Clark, Jr., who resides on West Fourth street, will go to Danbury, Conn., as manager of one of the departments of the Danbury concern.

FIREMEN ANSWER AN EARLY MORNING CALL.

The chemical engine from headquarters and No. 1 hose company responded to a still alarm at 5 o'clock this morning for a fire at the home of B. Goldstein, 444 West Front street, a blaze had started in a wood pile and communicated to the first floor because several of them had been burned off and a bad fire was well on its way when the apparatus arrived. The chemical engine stream put an end to the flames. The damage is about $100. Chief Doane was unable to assign any cause for the origin.

Box 14 was pulled at 10:24 this morning for a slight fire in James Baker's apartment in the building at Watchung avenue and Second street, opposite the Force property. No one was at home at the time when smoke was noticed pouring from the windows. A man whose store is beneath gained entrance and found a mattress burning in a bed room. He carried it to a back porch where the blaze was stamped out. There was nothing for the firemen to do on their arrival.

TO CLOSE CLEVELAND FUND LIST SATURDAY

With contributions of $500 on Monday and $86 yesterday, the Cleveland monument fund now in the homestretch, has reached the stately total of approximately $97,000. The exact amount is $96,990.

The list will be closed Saturday, the anniversary of the day when Cleveland was born. So it is "up to" those who wish to help perpetuate his memory and have not yet done so, to wipe out the small deficiency.

With four days remaining to make good on this balance of $3,000, and still about forty members of the Essex County Auxiliary Association to be heard from, it is assumed by those interested in the movement that a large proportion of it will come from them in the final reports. This committee, which was appointed by former United States Senator John F. Dryden, the president of the Cleveland Monument Association, has a membership of 110, made up of influential citizens, for the purpose of securing contributions largely on the score of patriotic pride. John R. Hardin, lawyer, is the chairman.

To Decorate Graves.

General J. Madison Drake, of Elizabeth, who has general supervision of the decoration of soldiers' graves throughout the county on Memorial Day, was in town today in consultation with Freeholder J. Hervey Doane, a member of the committee from the board, relative to the work in Plainfield. The members of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., will decorate the graves as usual, but the freeholders will furnish flags, etc., for that purpose.

Plan Costly Road.

Plans for improving the road from Elizabeth to Carteret, a distance of three miles, is being considered by the Union County Board of Freeholders. There is a division of opinion, however, as to the wisdom of making the improvement. It would cost a fabulous sum.

Number 3
THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

take charge of the department of public affairs, another the department of accounts and finance, another the department of public safety, another the department of streets and public improvements and still another the department of parks and public property, so that, whether in the keeping of the streets clean, the maintenance of a police or fire department, for the collection of revenues and etc., there is direct responsibility and if there be any failure in any one department the commissioner responsible for his department cannot put the responsibility upon the negligence of another commissioner, and if there be any failure in the performances of his duty the citizens of the municipality would know where to place the blame.

"Under the ward government as applied to the cities, the mayor and Council perform these services required by statutes or ordinances, but nowhere is there any provisions for individual obligations. The best and most capable man in the Common Council can render under such a plan no better services to the city than the most incompetent person for there is no provision made for the capable man to do more than the incompetent man will permit him to do. Under the present system of municipal government in most cases no exaction is made of an official to devote his entire time to public service for his services is intermittant, under the commission plan the commissioners must devote every day in the year to his duties and an advantage indeed when one comes to consider if emergency arises requiring prompt action the commissioners can promptly get at it and may correct an evil the same day instead of being obliged to wait until the meeting of council or committee or until orders have been passed along the line of different officials for the work to be done.

"With the abolishment of the old representation plan which has been the ward politician's sustaining power, the citizens and business men will have a much better opportunity of good representation, for, the commissioners could be elected without reference to party alignment or factional divisions. While the proposed form of municipal government would not wipe out or eliminate political parties, it would accord an opportunity for the people to rise above any narrow party lines and select their officers without being obliged to sustain mere narrow party adherents. Any citizen who can secure the necessary legal signatures may become a candidate before the people, the power resting with the people to decide upon those whom they want to govern and the great propositions of the proposed act are to make the city government feel responsive to public opinion and to an efficient administration.

"While the act confers upon the governing body great powers, let it is held strictly responsible for the right use of that power. With the obliteration of the ward lines entirely, the commissioners will represent the whole city so that every voter will have an equal part in selecting the officials at large and will have an equal claim upon their services. Such an act will do away with sectional preferences, will abolish the system of trades between the councilmen or reciprocation of favors to the disadvantage of other parts of the city and the commissioners would feel a direct responsibility to the entire municipality rather than to a limited section of the city. These contrasts it seems to me of the ward representation plan and the commission form of government quite well illustrates the distinctions between the old rule and what would be the new and the better.

"So far as the people are concerned there is no doubt but that this new form of government would prove of a more direct benefit to them notwithstanding some of the modern ward politicians might disfavor the plan, because forsooth their occupation, like Otthelo's, would be gone. But even leaders of the leading party organizations have come out decidedly in favor of this proposed plan. No less a person than Governor Tenner, of Pennsylvania, a strong party organization leader, in his inaugural address recommended that in so far as there were many cities in the Commonwealth which doubtless would hasten to avail themselves of this form of government if it were legally available that serious consideration be given by the Legislature of Pennsylvania to this important subject and while I do not speak authoritatively, I am given to understand that the governor of our own State is in favor of this form of government for municipalities where the people desire it. Whatever facts may be entertained by the members of the Legislature as to this form of government or the different plans growing out of the same, this much may be said that it is very doubtful if any of our senators or assemblymen would refuse to consent to legislation asked for by the people and in the interest of the people. None of the proposed acts introduced seek to impose any particular form of government upon the municipalities of the State, all that is asked upon the part of the Legislature is that it grants legislation to leave it to the people to decide whether they want the old system or the new. This right should not be denied any municipality of the State.

"A city government should be allowed the privilege of getting the best form of government of homerule possible and we are therefore quite confident that this Legislature will favor the adoption of the legislation asked for."

ADMIRALS IN THE MAKING.

The Course For Midshipmen at the Naval Academy and at Sea.

Two midshipmen are appointed each year by every United States senator and congressman, two are credited to the District of Columbia, and five are named each year from the United States at large. All are generally chosen by competitive examination.

The course for the midshipman is six years, four years at the academy and two years at sea, at the expiration of which time the candidate is required to take his examination for graduation. All midshipmen who pass these examinations are appointed to fill vacancies in the lower grade of the line of the navy.

All candidates for admission to the academy must be physically sound, well formed and of vigorous constitution. No boy who is manifestly undersized will be admitted. The height of the candidate must not be less than five feet two inches between the ages of sixteen and eighteen and not less than five feet four inches between the ages of eighteen and twenty. The minimum weight of the candidate at sixteen must be 100, with an increase of five pounds for each additional year or fraction of a year more than one-half.

No midshipman is permitted to marry between the date of his graduation from the academy and his final graduation for appointment in the line without the consent of the secretary of the navy. The pay of the midshipman is $600 a year, beginning with the date of his admission to the academy.

BUSY PEOPLE.

Here's a Writer Who Says They Rarely Accomplish Big Things.

The sun is blazing down on the garden in which lives a saint, so called, whom I visited one day in Bombay. He has not spoken for twenty-three years, and his neighbors look upon him with awe. Some months later I visited at Davos Platz a man who for nearly thirty years has been studying drops of blood under a microscope. He is getting as close to life as he can, but admits that he knows little more than the sage in his hot garden at Bombay. Both the western scientist and the eastern sage smile indulgently at the fussiness of modern life.

My own experience of men in many lands has taught me that the most active are least valuable. It is a notable survival of the simian in man that so many people think that constant mental and physical activity is a measure of value. Busy people seldom accomplish anything. The statue, the poem, the painting, the solution of the economic, financial or social problem, the courage and steadfastness for war even are all born in seclusion and appear mysteriously from nowhere. Moliere, Cromwell, Washington, Lincoln, Shakespeare, Dante and Cervantes all appear from nowhere and promptly take command of the busybodies. What a crowd of men we all recall who were so busy making themselves remembered that they are already forgotten!—Price Collier in Scribner's Magazine.

Beards and Beliefs.

Why is it that there seems to be some vital connection between a man's beard and his belief? The late George Jacob Holyoake, in an article contributed to the Fortnightly Review of September, 1903, recalls the time—not so very long ago—"when only four men in Birmingham had the courage to wear beards. They were followers of Joanna Southcott. They did it in imitation of the apostles, and were jeered at in the streets by ignorant Christians." In the course of the same article Mr. Holyoake remarks that "George Frederick Muntz, one of the two first members elected in Birmingham, was the first member who ventured to wear a beard in the house of commons, and he would have been insulted had he not been a powerful man and carried a heavy malacca cane, which he was known to apply to any one who offered him a personal affront."—London Standard.

The Mikado's Title.

The ruler of Japan really should be called ten-o, not mikado. The latter means "royal gate" and is a title somewhat similar to sublime porte, which is used indifferently to mean the Turkish sultan, his government or the country itself. Ten-o means "heaven's highest," a title surpassing all the most grandiloquent European efforts. The original Japanese equivalent for ten-o is soumelamikoto, but the former is universally used, perhaps on account of its brevity.

No Reason to Worry.

"I once played the part of Venus in a pantomime," said the lady who showed her age and was beginning to have a mustache.

"Well, I wouldn't let it worry me," replied the one who was still fair to look upon. "Venus was only a myth, so, of course, you didn't hurt her feelings."—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Same Thing.

The Ex-widow—You can't say I ever ran after you, Percival. The Second Helping—Very true, Hypatia. The trap never runs after the rat, but it gathers him in, all the same.—London Tatler.

The Restorative.

"How's your wife's cold this morning?" asked a neighbor.

"Much better, thank you. There's a dance tomorrow evening that she wants to go to."—Detroit Free Press.

When a man sits down and hopes for the best he is apt to get the worst of it.

We WANT COMPETITION

of the Right Sort, Not the Following Kind!

A Mrs. S—— after selecting her outfit and learning the total cost from our plainly marked price tags, said she preferred to make comparisons elsewhere before ordering, to which we readily agreed, for it's a thing we always URGE!

On getting another store's prices (where they were marked in private signs) she found ours were far less, and SAID so. The salesman promptly dropped to our figures—AND GOT THE ORDER.

Here, where there's but ONE PLAINLY MARKED PRICE ON EVERY ITEM, such an "accommodating" and sudden price drop would be impossible—here, when you read the price tag, you KNOW it's already at lowest point, for ALL prices are made and REMAIN on the SAME UNIFORMLY SMALL PROFIT BASIS. We don't HAVE to run a "leader" here and there for an hour, or a day, to catch trade, as ALL lines are equally good values EVERY day in the year!

All we want is HONEST competition that meet OUR plainly marked prices WITH prices you can READ!

ISN'T THAT FAIR?

EASY CREDIT 6 months, 1 year, or 1½ year's time to pay—or 10 per cent off for cash.

EVERY PRICE MARKED IN PLAIN FIGURES.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic.—The danger and uses of money.—Prov. xiv, 24; I Tim. vi, 17-19. Edited by Rev. Sherman H. Doyle, D. D.

Life is a trust from God. As we have nothing that we have not received from a loving Heavenly Father, so of everything that we possess each one of us is our Father's steward. No man is wise in the Scriptural meaning of the word who does not accept this fact of stewardship. No man can live as a Christian who does not recognize God's ownership of Himself and of all that he has and freely acknowledge God's right to require that in the use of all that he has he shall be found faithful. While this is true of every man and of every talent, it is peculiarly true of that man to whom God has intrusted riches. Only as the rich man accepts his possessions as from God, to be used for the purposes of God and to be accounted for unto God, will his riches prove to him a blessing and not a curse and in his hands prove to be a blessing and not a curse to his fellow men.

As Christians we sometimes wonder whether it is right for any man to be rich. More than one man feels that the teaching and the example of our Lord make the possession of wealth inconsistent with an honest profession of Christian faith. We cannot believe that such an idea is true. It is not in the possession of wealth, but in the abuses of wealth, that the evil lies. Prosperity is certainly one of the blessings of God. True faith enriches, for a true faith produces a morally superior man. It makes a man honest, industrious, temperate in every way. It improves his lot. The profits of godliness are earthly as well as heavenly. Jesus recognizes this fact. He commands us to give, enlists us in every good cause, teaches us to be good Samaritans. We must have money if we are going to do these things. Instead of teaching that the possession of riches is wrong Jesus emphasizes the responsibilities of riches, blesses the man who uses them as God's faithful steward and condemns the man who, being rich, is indifferent to his brother's need.

Our Lord warned us against the dangers of riches—warned us repeatedly. He painted the picture of the rich fool. He taught the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. He condemns both these men not because they were rich, but the "one for his selfish indulgence and forgetfulness of God, the other for his selfish disregard of men." That is always our peril. While men are putting gold into their hands the gold may be stripped from their hearts; while men are enjoying their fine houses and sumptuous feasts their brothers may be starving at their very gates; while men are laying up earthly treasures their hearts may not be rich toward God. Riches are an awful responsibility. No man needs more of the grace of God than the rich man. To be rich and to keep a spirit which is pure and humble, sincere and generous—what man has a harder task than that? To be rich and to meet the obligations of riches as a man of God, to be rich and to let the spirit of God control in the use of our riches—that is to achieve a splendid moral victory.

Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth.

Queensland, Past and Present.

On Christian Endeavor day a tablet which was fixed outside on the wall of the City tabernacle, Melbourne, Australia, to commemorate the founding of the first Christian Endeavor society in Australasia, was unveiled. The wording of the tablet is as follows:

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH.
This tablet
Commemorates the founding of the first society of
in Australasia
in connection with
This (then Wharf Street) Baptist church
Feb. 6, 1888.

ERECTED
in token of gratitude to God by QUEENSLAND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS
Feb. 19, 1910.

Queensland has about 193 societies with about 6,000 members. The president of the Queensland union is Rev. James Williams of Brisbane, a Methoance alliance and for ten years has been an active Endeavorer. He is manager of the Methodist Leader, is president of the Queensland Temperance alliance and for ten years has been the editor of the Alliance News. If Endeavorers respond to his opening message the year should be a record one.

The True Test.

The true test of a Christian Endeavor society's success is this: Are all the members being trained with a view to Christian growth and service? The distinctive purpose of Christian Endeavor is not so much to get things done as to get people to doing things, developing themselves by the doing.—Walter D. Howell in Forward.

ENDEAVOR.

Endeavor is the road of striving toward the goal,
A path that leads through thrifty thriving to be whole.

A Desperate Game

By JOHN K. LEYS,

Copyright, 1903, by John K. Leys.

He felt over its surface till he found the bolt and drew it back. Then he turned the handle. The door would not open. He was undoubtedly locked in his room!

The moment he had grasped this idea Guy threw off the power of the opiate he had swallowed as one throws off the bedclothes when he rises. He ran to the washstand, held his head over the basin and emptied the water jug over it. This helped to dissipate the effects of the drug and made him no colder than he had been before. He then groped for his candle, which had long since been blown out by the wind, closed the window, drew the curtains and tried to think what he had better do.

It was plain that foul play of some kind was intended, else why should he have been locked in his room? Clear enough, too, that Eva must be the object of the attempt, for Sir Rufus had no quarrel with him personally. Guy remembered that it had seemed to him at the time rather odd that Sir Rufus should have had an interview with the driver of Guy's cab in the library. He remembered also that the butler had been told not to awake him in the morning. There seemed to be no doubt that a plot was on foot and that some way must be found of defeating it.

"Thank God I woke when I did!" said Guy to himself as he sprang from his chair and began to pace up and down the room. "Can those have been Eva's screams I heard? Surely not! Villains as those men are, they surely would never dare"—

He must see Eva and assure himself of her safety. But how? He was a prisoner. The door was stout oak and could not possibly be broken open by anything he had at his command. As for the window, it was eighty or a hundred feet above the lake. The thought of making a rope of blankets and sheets that would reach so far was absurd.

The door seemed to be, after all, the only way of escape, and he searched all over it carefully with his candle in the hope that some plan would suggest itself to him.

The only tool he possessed was a penknife—not much more serviceable for such work than a surgeon's lancet would have been. Yet he did not despair. The door must be cut through, and he actually began to cut through the solid block of wood in which the lock was imbedded.

But the knife would do little more than scratch the hard surface of the wood. He was so cold that his fingers would scarcely hold it. He stopped for a moment or two to relight the fire, inserting the poker under the coals so that it would burn up quickly, and then set to work again. Suddenly the knife blade snapped in two close to the handle, and the question was settled.

With a deep groan he threw the useless thing on the floor, turned to the fire to warm himself and drew out the poker, which he had inserted among the coals. It was red hot, and he sprang to his feet with a cry of joy. He had found the way. He might not be able to cut out the lock, but perhaps he could burn it out.

He rushed across the floor with the redhot poker in his hand and tried it on the wood. He was rather disappointed to see how slow the burning process was, but the redhot bar of steel was at least a more effectual tool than the penknife had been, and he soon saw that it would be easier to burn out the hinges than to burn out the lock. The screws that held the hinge to the doorpost could not be far beneath the surface, and it must be quite possible to bore holes close to them so as to loosen and then destroy their grip on the wood.

He set to work afresh with this idea and found that it succeeded better than he had dared to hope. In the course of two hours he had bored a series of holes right down to the screws which were imbedded in the doorpost and loosened them to such an extent that if the door had been unlocked it would have fallen—down with a push. He threw his weight against the door, and, with a loud crack, the hinges gave way.

It seemed to him as he pushed his way through the gap that every man and woman in the castle must have been awakened by the noise, and, going a few steps along the corridor, he stopped and listened for perhaps a minute.

But the only sounds he heard were the beating of his own heart and a slight crackling from the fire in the room he had just left.

The one thing he had in his mind was to make sure that Eva was safe, and he cautiously stole along the corridor toward the staircase that led to the floor above.

He remembered that Jorrocks had told him that the parlor maid's room was directly over his own, and he decided that he must go to Eva's door and hear her own voice assuring him that she was safe before he did anything else.

At the foot of the stairs he paused and listened again. What was that? Surely some one was stirring in the darkness up there? He paused and listened, but could hear nothing, and, with a thought of scorn for his own nervousness, he went slowly upward.

He came to a half landing, passed it, came to another, passed that. There were but half a dozen more steps and he would be at the top. He mounted them. He was at the top. But it was so intensely dark that he had to feel his way. Should he turn to the left or to the right?

He took two steps to the right and came to a sudden stop. He had heard something — a man breathing, he thought. He turned sharply. There was a sudden flash of light—a flash that for the moment blinded him. He saw savage eyes and a whirling arm. Instinctively he threw up his arm to defend his head and dashed forward. But it was too late. The blow descended with cruel, merciless force. Guy heard nothing, saw nothing but the flashing light and the eyes and arm of a man, felt nothing but a dull pain that the next moment was swallowed up in unconsciousness.

CHAPTER XXXV.

SIR RUFUS' LAST THROW.

Sir Rufus Deveril's proposal to let chance decide between his enemy and himself was never more than a trick. He had resolved that, whatever might happen to Eva Fitzgerald, his faithless tool should never possess her. If he won at chess so much the better. It might drive Foscombe out of the field. If he lost he intended to have recourse to other measures. The telegrams he had received that afternoon had come from the skipper of a small steam yacht which had been placed at his disposal for the autumn by the owner of the vessel, now absent in Italy. He had ordered that the Sea Foam should be at the nearest seaport, Fairhaven, only a dozen miles away, on the following morning, and he had received word that his orders would be obeyed. He had secured the services of the cabman who had driven Guy to the castle to drive Eva and himself to Fairhaven in the early morning.

Anticipating that Eva might give trouble, he had got the housekeeper to give her a cup of coffee drugged as Guy's had been, and he had made up a story sufficiently plausible to impose on Mrs. Jorrocks, who was accustomed to obey her master without question. Once aboard the yacht, Sir Rufus thought there would be no further trouble. The girl would virtually be compelled to marry him. Of the statutes that make penal servitude the penalty for abducting an heiress Sir Rufus had never heard; nor is it probable that they would have turned him aside from his purpose if he had known of them. After he had locked Guy in his room Sir Rufus went to Foscombe's and found him in a very ill temper, cold, and tired of his own company.

"I've got the oaf safely disposed of," said the baronet, gleefully rubbing his hands. "You can come downstairs quite safely now. Come and warm yourself and have something to eat. I dare say you had a wretched dinner up here."

"It was not very cheerful, certainly," said the lawyer, wondering a little at the friendliness of the baronet's manner. "But I didn't mind, as it will soon be over. I hope there will be no doubt about our getting away in good time for the first train in the morning?"

"None whatever, I should say," said Sir Rufus, leading the way downstairs. "I sent up about an hour ago to see how Miss Fitzgerald was, and I was told that she was sleeping comfortably."

"That's good news," said the lawyer. He went into the dining room and stood over the fire warming his hands, while his host brought some eatables from the sideboard, where he had told the butler to leave them.

"Upon my word, I think I'll have a morsel with you," said Sir Rufus, laying a knife and fork for himself. "I couldn't dine comfortably with that fellow Lorimer sitting opposite me. What shall we have to drink? We ought to have a bottle of port up. I have some grand '47 port, but it's rather a bore getting it."

The lawyer's eyes gleamed at the mention of the '47 port.

"There's claret here, but rather inferior stuff," said the baronet, lifting a slender bottle as he spoke.

"Rather cold for a night like this," muttered Foscombe.

"That's true. I'll get up a bottle or two of the port." He moved toward the door and then stopped.

"I was forgetting," he said, with a smile. "The port belongs to you, not to me."

"Oh, nonsense!" exclaimed Foscombe, turning away his head.

"You won't say that when you come to look over the cellars here," said Sir Rufus, with a smile. Old wine was one of Foscombe's weaknesses, and he pricked up his ears at this intelligence.

"Oh, well," he said, with affected carelessness, "I dare say we can arrange something. If you have any special lots you want to dispose of"—

"That's nonsense," said the baronet sharply. "The wine is yours, and you know it. If you care to allow me a few dozens, that is another matter—of the inferior vintages, I mean."

As he spoke he lit a candle and now stood holding it in one hand and swinging the cellar keys in the other. "I'm going for a couple of bottles of that port," he said. "Would you care to see your new possessions?"

"I think I'd rather wait till daylight," said Foscombe.

"There isn't much daylight there at any time. I can give you a general idea of where the different wines are lying if you'd like to come with me."

CONSTRUCTION WORK SUBJECT OF ENGINEER

Frank W. Skinner, associate editor of the Engineering Record, lectured before the Men's Club of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church last evening on "Modern Construction Methods." His subject embraced reinforced concrete construction as applied to moedrn buildings and was illustrated with many technical displays.

In a few preliminary remarks the speaker said that the advantages of concrete and steel have been amply demonstrated in recent years especially in New York city, where the tallest buildings in the world have been erected with the steel and concrete bases sunk through as much as 80 feet of quicksand to a rock bottom. But even after the solid foundations have been built it has been found that there is a settling of the great structures reaching as much as 2 3-16 inches. In Chicago, where there are also many high buildings, settling has been known to reach 22 inches after the building had been completed for a year or more.

Pictures of the foundations built for the Pulitzer building, the Spreckles building in San Francisco, American Express Co.'s building, American Surety building and other large structures were shown giving to those who were technically wise a very clear idea of some of the recent engineering feats.

That some of the principles of present construction methods are not altogether modern Mr. Skinner threw on the screen photographs of drawings of work done in Hindoostan centuries ago which showed that principles developed by the ancient Hindus were in vogue today.

He declared that although steel was not fire proof it was incombustible, but even so it was the best material yet invented for building purposes.

The club thoroughly enjoyed the lecture and there were many present who were thoroughly conversant with the subject. Following the talk there was a social hour at which refreshments were served.

Mrs. Ida G. Roseberry, of West Fourth street, is seriously ill with a complication of troubles.

Planning for Annual Meeting.

The Sunday-school of the First M. E. church, at a meeting in Vincent chapel, last night, decided to hold the annual meeting for election of officers sometime this month, it being left with Superintendent Jas. R. Joy to fix the date. Several new teachers were elected last night, and the superintendent reported that the school is now in better condition than ever before. All the departments are doing good work under the direction of competent superintendents.

Attended Banquet in New York.

W. F. Williams, of Somerset street, attended the eighth annual banquet of the Hide & Leather Association held at the Hotel Astor, New York, last night. There were about two hundred members of the association present. Addresses were made by Comptroller Pendergast and Rev Dr. Eckman, of New York, and several others who are connected with the trade. The favors were handsome leather pocketbooks.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Gaskill, of East Sixth street, are the parents of daughter who came to their home on Sunday.

1ST M. E. CHURCH SOCIETY HOLDS ANNUAL ELECTION.

French; first vice-president, Mrs. Nelson A. Miller; second vice-president, Mrs. Henry McGee; third vice-president, Mrs. L. Albin; secertary, Mrs. Angus P. Atwood; treasurer, Mrs. Nelson Y. Hull.

The society which is one of the most active in the church, has a membership of about 110, and during the past year has raised $900, the greater part of which was for the renovation fund of the church. In addition the members made about 150 calls directly in line with the work of the society.

EXTRADITE HUBBY

Goszwski, Who Deserted Wife and Took Her Money, is Jailed.

E. N. CRANE HIS COUNSEL.

The Prisoner Married Servant in North Plainfield and Abandoned Her in Hoboken.

Charles Goszewski, against whom an indictment was found for desertion, and who incidentally "borrowed" from his wife, Mary, $600 or more, a month ago, was brought from Brooklyn yesterday to Jersey City and lodged in the Hudson county jail. It is expected that Goszewski's trial will be held within a short time.

Early yesterday morning Robert Newton Crane, counsel for Mrs. Goszewski, received notice that the extradition papers had been signed by Governor Dix, of New York, and that the prisoner would be turned over to the Hudson county authorities. Mr. Crane immediately went to Brooklyn and accompanied the prisoner to Jersey City and upon advice of County Prosecutor Pierre Garven, accepted the money and other valuables belonging to his client and which had been in the keeping of the property clerk of the Adams Street Police court. These things as well as the money will be kept until the man is brought to trial and the case decided.

About six weeks ago, Goszewski married Mary Golinski, who was a servant in a North Plainfield family, and two or three days after the wedding, it is alleged, he deserted his bride at a hotel in Hoboken, promising to return to her with the tickets which would entitle them both to passage to Russia. Mrs. Goszewki did not again see her husband until through the detective work of Sergeant John Flynn, of the local police, the recent husband was located in a Brooklyn hotel.

Before leaving his wife Goszewski induced her to hand over to him her money amounting to something like $625, most of which has been recovered. Strangely enough the law does not allow that a husband may steal from his wife nor vice versa, therefore, the only law that could be invoked to compel Goszewski's return to New Jersey soil was that of desertion, a complaint of which Mrs. Goszewski readily signed.

JUNIOR BOYS DEPARTMENT PLANNING PLEASING AFFAIR.

The Junor boys' department of Hope chapel has arranged for an interesting entertainment to be held in the Sunday school rooms next Wednesday night. The feature of the affair will be an illustrated lecture, "The Battle of Gettysburg," by Lieutenant L. F. Wilson, of the Wilson Military Academy, Finderne. The views are excellent and the lecture has met with approval everywhere.

Mayor George W. V. Moy has consented to attend the gathering and will address the parents of the boys. There will also be solos by several well known vocalists. The members of the department will have full charge of the entertainment, President Eckert introducing the speakers and others acting as ushers.

DEATH CLAIMS LAST MEMBER OF FAMILY

Eugene Wigger, who resided on West Front street near Plainfield avenue, for the past twenty-five years, died last night after a brief illness. He had been suffering for some time from a catarrhal trouble, but had been confined to his bed only two weeks.

Mr. Wigger was forty-eight years old and was a native of Switzerland. He was a barber by trade and worked in the Central building at Liberty and West streets, New York, for a long time. When he first came to Plainfield he and his wife made their home with his mother and stepfather, Francisco Genot, on West Front street. Genot and his wife passed away a few years ago and Mrs. Wigger died last May. The death of Mr. Wigger removed the last of the family, the only known surviving relative being a cousin who lives in Switzerland. The estate will probably revert to her. It includes the old Genot property.

Mr. Wigger was a man of quiet habits and made few acquaintances in Plainfield because of his absence in New York nearly all the time. The only organization he affiliated with was the Gesang and Turn Verein, the members of which will attend the funeral in a body. It will be held at 114 Plainfield avenue tomorrow afternoon. Burial will be in Hillside cemetery.

CHILDREN PERFORM FOR DAY NURSERY

An entertainment given for the benefit of the Day Nursery yesterday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. G. Stuart Simmons yielded $7.80 for the institution and incidentally pleased an audience of forty people. The entertainment consisted of three plays written and acted by pupils of the Stillman School whose ages range from eleven to thirteen years. It was an ambitious undertaking and the audience was surprised at the genius displayed by the little girls.

Tom Tit-Tot, dramatized by Dorothy Simmons; The Rival Princes, by the same authoress, and the Robber's Dream, by Dorothy Stelle and Miss Simmons, completed the bill. After the plays which were all heartily applauded, candy was sold by the young people. No charge was made for admission, but a silver collection was taken which together with the sale of candy netted the amount above stated.

Those who had candy tables were: Ruth Voorhees, Constance Veysey, Sweet Pease and Florence Vielsen, assisted by Dorothy Stelle. Edith Lowry and Helen Voorhees. Recitations were given by Miss May Simmons and Walter Silbert played the musical selections.

The program of plays follows:

Tom Tit-Tot: Old Woman, Dorothy Silbert; King, Dorothy Simmons; Princess, Dorris Silbert; Tom-tit-tot, Catherine Stout.

Act one takes place in front of the old woman's cottage, and acts two and three take place in the king's palace, in the room where the princess is imprisoned.

The Rival Princes: Jester, Catherine Stout; Prince Percinet, Mary Simmons; Princess Delight, Dorris Silbert; Witch, Dorothy Silbert; Prince Charming, Dorothy Simmons; King, Mary Duncan

Act one takes place in front of the tower in which the Princess is imprisoned; act two takes place in the woods near a witch's cave; act three takes place in Prince Charming's castle where a duel is fought, and act four takes place in front of the Princess' tower.

The Robber's Dream: Robber, Dorothy Simmons; man to be robbed, Mary Simmons; ghosts, Dorothy Silbert, Dorris Silbert Catherine Stout and Mary Simmons.

Act one takes place in the woods near the highway; act two takes place on the highway where a duel is fought; act three takes place in the robber's house.

St. Patrick's Day Celebration.

Under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary, A. O. H., No. 4, there will be a Saint Patrick's birthday celebration in Sebring's Hall tomorrow evening at which a special array of Irish and Scottish talent will appear. After the entertainment dancing will occupy the rest of the evening. A feature of the entertainment will be a bag-piper of international reputation.

Will Have Charge of Music.

Clifford A. Braider, organist of the First Presbyterian church, will have charge of the music at the reception to be given to Miss Sara Curry, at the Litte Missionary's Day Nursery, tomorrow night. Mr. Braider has charge of the music every Tuesday evening at the nursery.

WANT PLANT HERE

Commerce Chamber Committee Subcribes $8,000 for Harris Company Stock.

MERCHANTS MAY SUBSCRIBE.

Julius Keeler, Representing a Typewriter Concern, Meets Committee—Plainfield Not to Be a "Factory Town."

Substantial progress is being made in the effort to bring the Harris Typewriter Company to this city, and the prospects of success are bright. The Chamber of Commerce's special committee, appointed by President George L. Babcock, met Julius Keller, of the typewriter company, yesterday afternoon and outlined its progress. As an evidence of the faith in the proposition the committee raised nearly $8,000 as a personal effort. Mr. Keller was accompanied by a New York man, who said that he proposes to invest a considerable sum in the plant if it is located here.

The details will be laid before the Chamber at a meeting Monday night, after which the committee will make a general canvas of the business men with a view to securing subscriptions to stock. The plant if built here will represent an outlay of more than $300,000 to start. More than one hundred skilled mechanics will be employed. The concern proposes to turn out at least two hundred typewriters a day at first, to be increased as business warrants. A Chicago concern, it is said, has agreed to take one hundred machines a day for a period of ten years.

The Chamber of Commerce, according to Secretary Ulrich, has taken the position that it does not desire to make Plainfield a factory town in that sense of the word, but there are a limited number of sites along the railroad and the Chamber is anxious that they should be secured by first-class concerns and thus keep out the undesirable factories that might be located in the city. Members of the Chamber say that it is not their purpose to favor indiscriminately every factory that might come along and would like the residents of the city to know that fact.

PUPILS TO COMPETE FOR DAILY PRESS PRIZE

Pupils of the Plainfield High School will have the usual privilege of writing compositions this year for The Daily Press prize of $10 in gold and at the same time enter the general competition for prizes offered by the Women's Christian Temperance Union and those offered by individuals.

The pupils this year have a wide range of subjects from which to choose, among them are subjects suggested by individual experiences in many different places and to those who can do it there is the open field of original story telling.

The Daily Press prize may be secured through a composition which has to do with one of five subjects: City Forestry, Plainfield Water Supply, Its Source and Purity; the Advantages or Disadvantages of the Commission Form of Government, and How Plainfield can Be Made an Ideal City.

The prize for which the students are to struggle, offered by the W. C. T. U. will embrace such subjects as have to do with the use of alchol as a beverage and other kindred subjects.

The judging of the merits of the competitors will be left to the usual committee and it is assured that the same unprejudiced reading as has characterized the previous competitions will prevail this year. All manuscripts in the prize competitions must be in the hands of the judges by May 1.

Acquires Manning Block.

John Abbott, of West Front street, contractor and builder, has purchased the Manning building on West Front street, opposite the old Scheplin block, which was owned by the Misses Harriet and Sarah Manning. The ground floor is occupied by stores and the upper floors as apartments. The consideration is not known. The block was built by the late Joel Manning.

Mission Band to Give Supper.

The Young Women's Mision Band of Trinity Reformed church is planning to give a supper at the church on Tuesday evening, March 28, the menu to include chicken salad, oysters and many other good things of the season. The tickets will be thirty-five cents and the proceeds will be for the mision work carried on by the band.

HELP FOR COLLEGE

Funds for Rebuilding Mt. St. Mary's Started in Various Cities.

CAMDEN DEAN GIVES $300.

Money Being Raised in Newark, Elizabeth and Other Places—Gift of Fifty Beds Made by Camden Firm.

While the committee in this city is working hard for the re-building of the Mt. St. Mary College structure, others in various parts of the State are also putting their shoulders to the wheel and aiding in a substantial way, the great work.

Word was received this morning that Dean B. J. Mulligan, of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, in Camden, has started a subscription list with a contribution of $300. The list has increased with its circulation among the members of the church and will undoubtedly result in a handsome gift when finally collected. A firm of furniture dealers of Camden has signified its intention of furnishing fifty beds for the dormitories of the rebuilt college.

The subscriptions which have been started in Elizabeth and Newark and other cities promise to bring a considerable sum to the rebuilding fund, all of which is encouraging the Sisters of Mercy and leads them to hope that the new building will when completed help to obliterate the anguish of the several personal losses they sustained.

This morning all the regular students returned and resumed their classes at the cottage opened at 53 Fairview avenue.

MRS. A.M. VAN WINKLE DIED THIS MORNING

Mrs. Anna M. VanWinkle, wife of William H. VanWinkle, died this morning at her home, 28 Park place, following a long illness which began two years ago last August. During the past few months she failed rapidly. She was a native of Woodbridge and her maiden name was Anna M. Dunn. She had resided in this city the greater part of her life. She was a sister-in-law to Daniel Van Winkle, who died at the same residence on February 25, after a brief illness.

Mrs. VanWinkle was a member of the First Presbyterian church, and a regular attendant until illness prevented. She is survived by a husband, one son, William VanWinkle, of this city, and a daughter, Mrs. Henry McCormick of Cheltenham, England. The funeral will be held at the late home, Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, and Rev. Dr. C. E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian church, will officiate. The burial will be in North Plainfield cemetery.

JUDGMENTS RENDERED IN DISTRICT COURT.

In the District Court this morning Judge William Newcorn gave judgment in favor of the plaintiffs in two contested actions. The case of John McNally against Mary McCarthy for wages involving $25, was decided in favor of McNally the judgment being for $33.50 which included interest. Walter Hetfield appeared for the plaintiff.

In the other case in which David N. Force sought to recover from Albert Stevens an amount of rent due on a lease of property Judge Newcorn decided that Mr. Force was entitled to the rent for the unexpired period of the lease and so ordered. The judgment was for $64. Francis J. Blatz appeared for the plaintiff while Mr. Stevens defended the suit himself.

Hope Chapel Society Elects.

Officers were elected and reports presented at the annual meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society of Hope chapel, yesterday afternoon. The reports showed a balance, after all bills were paid, of $174.04, which will be used for chapel work. These officers were elected: President, Mrs. Robert Hangliter; vice-president, Mrs. James Heron; secretary, Mrs. Willard H. Cook; treasurer, Mrs. Charles Hughes.

Want Constitutional Convention.

The Assembly last night passed the Senate resolution calling on Congress for a constitutional convention to bring about the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people.

—The second annual ball of the Yama Yama Social Club will be held tonight in Saengerbund Hall. The committee assures a good time to all those attending. The grand march will start at 10 o'clock.

CAUGHT DESERTER

Richard Hone, Indicted in Union Co., is Arrested in New York City.

TO EXTRADATE PRISONER.

Hone Furnished Bonds to Support Wife But Disappeared—A Woman is Mentioned in the Case.

Richard Hone, against whom an indictment was found by the October grand jury for desertion and who disappeared several months ago, was arrested yesterday in New York and lodged in the Tombs prison where he will be confined pending extradition. This ends a search which has been kept up ever since Hone disappeared and will probably mean his return to Elizabeth where he will be arraigned on the charge mentioned.

Hone came here from Easton, Pa., eighteen months ago and entered the employ of a silk factory on Watchung avenue and while there his wife followed him from Easton and, it is alleged, found Hone living with a young woman named Jennie Huff. She caused her husband's arrest and a hearing was given him in the city court before Judge William N. Runyon and Hone furnished bonds to pay his wife a certain sum of money each week.

Apparently the matter was settled for good, but later developments changed the aspect of the case. Hone did not return to live with his wife and it was said that the Huff woman was installed in the home as housekeeper. At the hearing before Judge Runyon, Hone accused his wife of persistent intoxication which charge was denied. Hone's daughter appeared against Mrs. Hone, giving the court to understand that the allegations of the husband were true.

J. Henry Crane, who prosecuted the case for Mrs. Hone is still attending to the matter for her. She is still a resident of this city.

GIFTED SOPRANO TO SING AT BENEFIT

If there is anyone still unprovided with tickets for tomorrow night's entertainment in the Plainfield theatre for the benefit of Mount St. Mary College, it would be advisable to secure them today. There are a few seats remaining unsold today and by tomorrow morning it is believed the entire house will have been sold out.

One of the attractions offered on the big program will be Mlle. Mathilde Bruguiere, who will sing two groups of songs. The first will consist of three operatic selections, the Jewel Song, from Gounod's Faust; La Habanera, from Bizet's Carmen; Earl King, Schubert, and Dicht Theure Halle, from Tannhaeuser, by Wagner.

The second group consists of three Irish ballads, "Killarney," "Kathleen Mavoureen" and "When Love is Kind."

Mlle. Bruguiere has sung before other audiences in this city and has had a wide experience in repertoire in opera. She has always given her audiences the greatest of pleasure.

RACE TRACK MAN HAD SEVERAL HANDY NAMES.

A stranger was picked up in the street by the police last night whose various names caused Captain Frederickson some trouble. He called himself William Henry Hurlbutt Harrison Butler once and then changed it to plain Frank Burke.

This morning when arraigned before Judge DeMeza in the city court, he said his real name was Frank Ryan and that he is a race track follower and is on his way east to secure a job. He was drunk when arrested and this morning promised to get out of town. He was released.

Get-Together Club Banquet.

The Get-Together Club will hold its annual dinner tomorrow evening at the Waldorf and from present indications it promises to be an event. Among the speakers invited to be present on this brilliant occasion are United States Senator James E. Martine, T. M. Donnelly, supreme secretary of the Foresters of America; Francis Lee, of Trenton, historian and journalist. Plates for eighty guests have been provided.

Fined for Gambling.

Isaac Byram, who with John Scruggs, pleaded guilty on Monday to a charge of permitting gambling to be done in the poolroom at 525 West Third street, was fined $10 this morning by Judge DeMeza and promised to see to it that the offense is not repeated.

WALKER WESTON TO TALK TONIGHT

Edward Payson Weston, considered to be the greatest living long-distance pedestrian, will speak tonight to the members of the Brotherhood of the First M. E. church, in Vincent chapel. To many of the older men of the church, Weston is remembered as a "wonder" and one of the best exponents of the heel and toe art.

In 1897 Weston, in a try for a new record walked 1,977½ miles in 1,000 consecutive hours. In 1867, he walked from Portland, Me., to Chicago, a distance of 1,232 miles, taking a little over thirty days to accomplish the journey. He repeated the trip in 1907, doing the distance in twenty-nine days.

Weston has always maintained that walking is the best physical exercise that a human can take and to his indulgence in it he attributes his long life and continued good health. On his last trip across the continent when he walked the 3,600 miles between New York and San Francisco, he eclipsed all previous records for endurance and upon his arrival in San Francisco, where he delivered a message from former Mayor George B. McClellan to the mayor of San Francisco, he arrived at his destination in absolutely perfect physical condition. His talk tonight will be of great interest to all.

CLERK OF SOMERSET FREEHOLDERS DIES

Arthur P. Sutphen, one of the best known men in Somerset county, died at his residence in Somerville, yesterday. He suffered a paralytic stroke just after leaving a session of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders yesterday. He had served as clerk for that body more than thirty years and after the session yesterday he complained of feeling tired and left his office in the Somerset County Courthouse. He walked to his home, where he was stricken soon after his arrival and never regained consciousness.

Mr. Sutphen was the acknowledged historian of Somerset county and had been identified with public affairs in many official capacities for more than a half century. T.I. RUNYON DEAD

Highly Respected Citizen Passes Away in His Seventy-Fifth Year.

CHURCH DEACON FOR 35 YEARS.

For Forty Years Connected with An Insurance Co.—Veteran of Civil War—Cousin of Late Chancellor Runyon.

Theodore I. Runyon, who had been critically ill for the past few days, died at his home on Putnam avenue, shortly before 7 o'clock last night. Death was due to a general breakdown following an organic trouble that had been affecting him since last summer. While he had suffered considerably since the first of February, he took to his bed only last Saturday.

Theodore Ira Runyon was born in this city on October 2, 1836. He was the son of Ira and Sarah Runyon, the former, previous to his death in 1843, being a prominent hat manufacturer in this locality. There were four sons and two daughters in the family, of whom A. M. Runyon, of Madison avenue, is now the only survivor.

Theodore Runyon remained in Plainfield as a young man and at the outbreak of the Civil war enlisted in Captain Hubbard's company of volunteers. Nelson Runyon was also a member. With the surrender of Lee and the restoration of peace, Mr. Runyon returned to Plainfield but soon after removed to Elizabeth where he remained eight years. He then came back to this city and continued to reside here ever since. For many years he lived on West Fourth street between Central avenue and New street.

While still residing in Elizabeth, Mr. Runyon became identified with the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company of Newark, and held a responsible position until his retirement last January. He was at the head of one of the most important departments.

When the Park Avenue Baptist church was organized in 1876, Mr. Runyon was one of the leaders in the movement. He was elected deacon at the time and held the office continuously until the time of his death. He practically devoted all his outside time to the work of the church, taking no part in either civic, fraternal or social affairs. He was superintendent of the Sunday-school for many years and was known throughout the State as one of the leading figures in the Baptist denomination. He was frequently remembered by Sunday-school departments for his valuable services.

Mr. Runyon was twice wedded. His first wife was Miss Lydia Randolph, who died in 1868. There were three daughters by this marriage, Mary, claimed by death when a young girl; Adelia and Laura, the latter now Mrs. S. Arthur Krom, both of this city. His second marraige was with Miss Nancy Greenwood, who, with one daughter, Miss Emily Runyon, survive him. Mr. Runyon was a first cousin to the late Chancellor Runyon, Ambassador to Germany at the time of his death fifteen years ago.

The funeral service will be held at the late residence, 1015 Putnam avenue, tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock.

Made in Boston.

There is a little restaurant in Boston where every evening a group of young men meet to talk and dine. They have become very familiar with the menu through long study and elaborate combinations. But recently there was a surprise for them among the deserts, "Lillian Russell, 30 cents."

The diners eyed the words with interest. "What in the world is that?" one of them asked.

"Oh," answered another of the men, in a noochalant fashion, "probably a preserved peach."—Boston Traveler.

News and Notes

BASEBALL.

One day when the White Sox and Naps were having a desperate struggle at South Side Park in Chicago, the attention of the players was directed to a man, who, accompanied by several women, occupied one of the front boxes, and who wildly cheered every good play. The man was dressed in faultless fashion, and when he would get up, swing his tall silk hat over his head and shout his approval or disapproval of a play, everybody in the stands and on the diamond was forced to take notice.

In the ninth inning, when the score was 4 to 1 in favor of the White Sox, the Naps filled the bases, with nobody out. Up to this time Lajoie had made three of the Naps' four hits. As Larry took his place at the bat, with a fellow player on every base, the man in the box arose, took off his glossy hat and faced the 15,000 people sitting behind him.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he shouted, "permit me to inform you that this ball game is now over and that Cleveland wins by the score of 5 to 4."

As a sort of echo to this delaration came the crash of Larry's bat against the ball, and when Fielder Jones had retrieved the sphere out by the centre-field fence, the score was indeed as the fan had said—5 to 4 in favor of Cleveland.

Cy Parkins, the big twirler of the Indians, who hails from Hudson, S. D., is getting in condition by playing golf on the links of the Forest Hill Golf Club links every day. Parkin has become quite an expert at the game and says that next to baseball it is the best sport in the world. Cy says that he can feel himself getting thinner day by day, and that he will be in great conditionby the time the Braves report at Lakewood. According to the big heaver, the links put him in mind of the prairies in his home State. Cy received a St. Patrick's day postal from Joe Crisp, who is training with the St. Louis Americans. Secretary Frank J. McTague, of the Indians, was another to be remembered by the former back of the Redskins. Crisp states that he is in great shape and expects to do excellent work for the Browns this season.

Amos Rusie is coming back. The once famous pitcher of the Giants is organizing a team at Charleston, Miss., and intends to alternate between the box and first base. Rusie is employed by a millionaire lumberman, who is going to furnish the money to organize and maintain a team in Charleston.

After a long debate the New York Assembly Tuesday defeated by a vote of 65 ayes to 73 nays the bill to legalize Sunday baseball by amateurs.

Although Manager Griffith, of the Cincinnati Nationals, put the regulars of his team in the line-up against the St. Louis Americans, the latter outhit and outfielded the Reds, at Hot Springs, and won, 3 to 1. This is the third of a series of nine games. Cincinnati won the first and St. Louis the last two.

The National Baseball Commission made a recommendation to the National and American leagues and the National Association Tuesday to change section 1 of article 7 of the national agreement so as to make it compulsory for teams to tender a contract to its players before February 1 each year. Heretofore this date has been fixed at March 1 and in case no contract is tendered a player is declared a free agent. Until such a change is made, however, the commission rules that the player does not necessarily have to receive his contract by March 1, but the contract must be in the mails by that time.

Manager Jack Dunn, of the Orioles, is planning with Manager Connie Mack, of the Athletics, for a memorial day in Baltimore for the benefit of the widow of Shortstop Nicholls. The entire proceeds of the game will be turned over to Mrs. Nicholls. All of the Orioles have volunteered their services, while the former team-mates of Nicholls on the Athletics, who were at Hot Springs when news of Nicholls' death was broken, were the first to make the suggestion.

A spirited work-out concluded the work of the Giants Tuesday at Marlin, Tex., as a heavy fall of rain beat down on the players before they could get back to the hotel. The only event of the day of importance occurred when Pitcher Rustenhaven, who was laid up with a bad leg, walked on the field and was hit by a foul ball which knocked him flat. The worst that will result will be a black eye.

The members of the Temple Baptist church will give a farewell reception to Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Musson on Tuesday evening, March 28, prior to their going to Meriden, Conn.

JOHN KEAN AS PRIZE IN TOWNSHIP DIVISION.

Whether former United States Senator John Kean's residence will be retained within the limits of Union under the suggested division of the township, or be included in the proposed municipality of "Ursino," is the subject of interest to Union residents.

Union is not opposed to the proposed division of its territory providing the former Senator's home is not included in the partition. The division of the township has been rather looked for and expected for some time, but the residents are not of the same mind as to just where the dividing line should be.

What Union approves as a boundary line is allowing the Elizabeth River to constitute the dividing line, and following the course of the river through the township to the Essex line. This would leave the former Senator within Union Township. That, however, is not favorable to the other side.

Thus Mr. Kean becomes the bone of contention between the two opposing elements. Just what he will do is not known. When interviewed he appeared to be but little concerned and not to know very much about it.

But it is believed the former Senator is enjoying the situation immensely. It has been reported that he was in favor of the division and of himself going with it, but those who know him well and the traditions of the family are inclined to the belief that Mr. Kean will stay in Union.

Union Township at one time included Roselle Park, Kenilworth and the El Mora section of Elizabeth. One of these sections, through an influx of population, have become conscious of the need of developments which the township as a whole was not prepared for.

It has been foreseen that Lyons Farms would sooner or later be obliged to follow the example of the other outlaying districts, and either join interests with the larger municipalities adjoining or become a self-governing body. The rapid growth in the Saybrook district has tended to hasten this end.

The present bill before the Legislature includes the territory covered by these districts and also a strip of land including the residence and the properties of the former Senator.—Newark Evening News.

Borough Recorder and Mrs. Chas. M. Dolliver, of Fairview avenue, have returned from New York, where they have been visiting relatives. Tuesday evening they heard Rev. Gabriel Reid Maguire give his lecture on Africa at the Thirty-third Street Baptist church.

Raymond V. Brokaw, the Wesleyan College student, who was injured several weeks ago in the annual cannon rush at Middletown, Conn., arrived at his home on Grandview avenue, yesterday. He says that he is improving rapidly. He will remain here until he fully recovers.

Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. & A. M., at its communication Tuesday night, conferred degrees on four candidates.

THE FORUM.

Repies to Mr. Pearson.

Editor, The Daily Press:

Kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to reply to an article which appeared in The Daily Press on March 14, in which E. C. Pearson would like to know for himself, as well as for the interest of the public, on what ground seventy-five business men signed a petition to the Council, asking for a reconsideration of their action on the application of the Gloekler license.

Being one of the signers, and always ready to defend my action and leave the public to judge, I feel it my duty in this case, as well as any other as a citizen and taxpayer, to state that I signed said petition to give Mr. Gloekler a square deal, such as any citizen would expect from a governing body. This does not mean that the license should have been granted, or that I advocated granting it, but it meant to reconsider and give him a trial to prove whether he was guilty or not, and then act on his application according to the court's findings.

Had the Council refused the license on the ground that public sentiment, as well as a good many business men were against a saloon on that corner, and that it was for the best interest of the city not to grant it, I am satisfied there would not have been any petition presented for reconsideration, but all would have sanctioned the action of the Council. But the license was refused solely on the ground of alleged sale to minors, and had this accusation not been made, there is not the slightest doubt the license would have been granted.

Again, the alleged sale to minors is supposed to have taken place on or about Feb. 11 last. If this was the case, why was Mr. Gloekler not charged with violation, arrested and brought to trial, and if found guilty, his old license revoked, in which case no new application would have been made, hence none would have to be refused.

I perfectly agree with the resolution adopted and presented by the Ministers' Association to the Council upholding them in their endeavor to reduce the number of licensed places when the laws are violated or when public sentiment is against it, but I am not in harmony with them in censuring the business men for asking the governing body to give one of their fellow citizens and neighbor a square deal, such as the Bible teaches us to give to our fellowmen, and as is preached from the pulpit by the reverend gentlemen, to wit: Do to our neighbors as we want him to do to us.

Furthermore, I think that our government is greatly at fault for permitting the manufacture and sale of whiskey, for in my opinion it certainly is a curse upon the nation and should be prohibited.

In conclusion, permit me to say, that this article is not written to start a controversy, but solely for the purpose of giving E. C. Pearson the desired information.

Number 3

THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

SCARE STORY ABOUT NEW JERSEY'S GUARD

"The story published yesterday afternoon that Adjutant General Wilbur F. Sadler, Jr., had been summoned to Washington, and that his mission was to arrange for sending New Jersey national guardsmen as troops to Texas in the service of the government, is untrue," said Chief Clerk John M. Rogers to a reporter last evening.

Continuing, Captain Rogers said: "This department has not been in touch with Washington by letter, 'phone or telegraph on such a question, and there is no mystery about the trip of the adjutant general. He has gone to Washington in an effort to get the national rifle matches again for this State. There is a desire among many officers for the shooting of these matches at Sea Gift. They have not been shot there since the last year of Governor Stokes' term.

"Of course, while General Sadler is in Washington he will call upon the war department to arrange for sending the New Jersey officers selected to go to the front to observe the army maneuvres. There is nothing to the story that Jersey troops are likely to go to the front, or has intimation come that they will soon be wanted for duty there."

FUERTES' REPORT ON CRANFORD WATER

James H. Fuertes, the engineer who prepared an elaborate report for the special water committee from the Common Council regarding water supply in this city, which has not been favorably acted upon, has performed a like service for Cranford, where he located the water for the town supply. His report is to be received at a meeting of the township committee next Wednesday regarding the quantity and quality of the water and the cost of a municipal plant in Cranford. It is the purpose of the authorities to arange for a special election next month.

J. Z. Smith, a member of the township committee, reported to the committee last night that two wells driven on Springfield avenue for a town supply of water would yield 500,000 gallons of water a day and if the wells were driven 100 feet deeper 1,000,000 gallons could be pumped. He denied the report that the water was not fit for domestic purposes.

THINGS THAT COUNT.

It is not the rare gifts of the few; it is not great wealth, great learning, great genius or great power; it is not these things that make the possessors happy. It is health; it is friendship; it is love at home; it is the voices of children; it is sunshine; it is the blessings that are commonest, not rarest; it is the gifts God has scattered everywhere. — C. H. Morrison.

The Judge's Advantage.

One of the best stories of Judge Parry, a famous English jurist, related to a feeble looking man who was rebuked for supporting a ridiculous claim made by his wife. "I tell you candidly I don't believe a word of your wife's story," said Judge Parry.

"Yer may do as yer like," replied the man mournfully, "but I've got to."

It was once the doubtful privilege of Judge Parry to overhear the comments of two men against whom he had decided. "He's a fool, but 'e did 'is best," was the verdict of these disappointed suitors. "One might sleep under an indicter epitaph," was the philosophic comment of the judge.—London Graphic.

No Harm Done.

"Dear me, pa," said the beautiful heiress, "you'll mortify me to death yet."

"What's the matter now, Lil?"

"You told John to go down to the depot and get the earl's baggage right out loud so that he couldn't help hearing you. Why can't you learn to say station and luggage?"

"Oh, don't mind that. The earl won't care. He's got used to United States talk. He asked me this morning how I got my dough and how much I had of it."—Philadelphia Record.

In the Age of Science.

The bear of a man was still, of course, a bear of a man. No artifice could substantially alter that fundamental condition of life, the result being that he glowered at his breakfast much as usual.

"Nothing but proteids, carbohydrates and ash content. Can't you manage to get something different once in awhile?" he growled.

What, in fine, had the advances of science done to ease the lot of the patient wife? Was there less dismay in store for her?—Puck.

The Opal.

The superstition against the opal began through the stonecutters, each of whom would anxiously ask every other if he had had any luck in his cutting, for the opal contains 13 per cent water and is exceedingly brittle and therefore difficult to cut successfully.

Too Much Realism

"Do you not feel at times," remarked the fireside critic, "that realism can be carried too far on the stage?"

"Yes," replied the tragic actor, with a sigh. "The last man I was working for did it. He wanted to pay us all off in stage money."

LOOK TO YOURSELF.

There is an idea abroad among moral people that they should make their neighbors good. One person I have to make good—myself. But my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying that I have to make him happy, if I may.—Stevenson.

Fooling a Solomon.

An Irish magistrate was perplexed by the conflicting claims of two women for a baby, each contending that she was the mother of it. The justice remembered Solomon's procedure in a similar case and, sending an officer of the court for a carving knife, declared he would give half to each. The women were shocked, but had no doubt of the authority and purpose of his worship to make the proposed compromise. "Don't do that!" they both screamed in unison. "You can keep it yourself!" From "Irish Life and Humor."

Greek Fire.

The so called Greek fire was some sort of combustible composition, probably naphtha, that was thrown from engines said to have been invented by Callinicus of Heliopolis about the middle of the seventh century to destroy the ships of the Saracens. From all accounts the effects of this combustion were fearful. It is claimed that 30,000 Saracens were consumed by it upon a single occasion. A so called Greek fire, a solution of phosphorus in bisulphide of carbon, was employed at the siege of Charleston in 1863.—New York American.

Where Women Don't Like to Shop.

The stranger in Korea finds that he has struck topsyturveydom when he learns that women do not like shopping, that the prominent merchants keep their wares concealed in closets instead of displaying them in showcases and that the customer who does not fancy the first piece of goods brought from concealment is likely to be told that the merchant is quite sure he has nothing better. Elsewhere the street sign plays an important part in attracting trade. The large merchant houses in Korea are entirely without street signs.—Baltimore Star.

When Feathers Came High.

A young lady only ten feet high was overset in one of the late gales of wind in Portland place and the upper mast of her feather blown upon Hampstead hill.

The ladies now wear feathers exactly of their own length, so that a woman of fashion is twice as long on her feet as in her bed.—London Times, Dec. 30, 1795.

An Insistent Creditor.

Mr. Goodenough—My dear fellow, how shabby you look! Don't you think it is wrong to waste your money on your stomach when you are so badly in want of new clothes?

Mr. Wastrell (who has just enjoyed a good dinner)—P'raps it is; but, you see, my back will always give me credit, but my stomach insists upon payment at once and in full whenever I have any money.

CARD OF THANKS.

MRS. J. T. DIGGS, SON & DAUGHTER.

AVOID THE RUTS.

The most beaten and frequented tracks are those which lead us most astray. Nothing, therefore, is more important than that we should not, like sheep, follow the flock that has gone before us and thus proceed not whither we ought, but whither the rest are going.—Seneca.

Died From Terror.

Perhaps the most remarkable death from fear was that of the Dutch painter Pentman, who lived in the seventeenth century. One day he went into a room full of anatomical subjects to sketch some death's heads and skeletons for a picture he intended to paint. The weather was very sultry, and while sketching he fell asleep. He was aroused by bones dancing around him and the skeletons suspended from the ceiling clashing together. In a fit of terror he threw himself from a window, and, though he sustained no serious injury and was informed that a slight earthquake had caused the commotion among his ghostly surroundings, he died in a few days in a nervous tremor.

Dodging a Lion Hunter.

The fondness that some people have for contact with notables is not always shared by the notables themselves. It is told of the late Baron Huddleston that he once tried to obtain a seat next to a duke at the table d'hote in a hotel where both were guests. That this proximity to the great man might be brought about the baron gave the waiter a sovereign. The servant proved a traitor, and, an explanation being demanded, he confessed that the duke had given him two sovereigns not to give the baron the coveted seat.

His Legacy.

The sad little old man lay dying on his hard bed. He called his family together and addressed them thus: "My children, I am about to be summoned hence. I am, as you know, a poor man and have little to leave you, but all I have I give you gladly."

So he beckoned them to his bedside one by one, kissed them and gave them measles.—London Answers.

FAVORS REMOVAL OF GEN. KEARNEY'S BODY

The Senate yesterday passed unanimously a resolution appropriating $5,000 to remove the body of General Phil Kearny from Trinity churchyard, in New York, to the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va.

By common consent the Senate gave to Senator Nichols, of Cumberland, the honor of speaking for the measure. In a glowing five-minute speech, Mr. Nichols paid a splendid tribute to General Kearny.

COL. HINE IS MADE BRIGADIER GENERAL

Colonel Edwin W. Hine, of the Fifth Regiment, was unanimously elected brigadier-general of the First Brigade last night at a meeting of the field officers of the First, Fourth and Fifth Regiments in the Union League Club, 295 York street, Jersey City. He succeeds Brigadier-General E. A. Campbell, who before he was elected general was colonel of the First Regiment of Newark.

The election was presided over by Major-General P. Farmer Wanser.

In accepting the brigadier-generalship, Colonel Hine made a brief address thanking his fellow officers for the honor conferred on him and stated that he felt it would be hard to fill the boots of such a capable officer as General Campbell.

Following the election, Colonel Hine was the guest of honor at a banquet of the field officers at the Union League Club.

It is understood that Lieutenant-Colonel Van Walraven will succeed General Hine as colonel of the Fifth Regiment without opposition, and that Major Shoenthal will succeed to the lieutenant-colonelcy.

CONFESSES MURDER OF 10 YEAR OLD GIRL

Frank E. Heidemann, a German, 27 years of age, was arrested on an Atlantic City express just before it pulled into the Red Bank station late yesterday afternoon, charged with the murder of Marie Smith, the ten-year-old school girl, who disappeared from Asbury Park, on November 9 last, and whose mutilated body was found four days later in the woods along Deal lake. Heidemann was taken from the train, placed in an automobile, and hurried to Freehold, where he was placed in a cell in the county jail.

In a confession alleged to have been made by the young German, he declares the murder was deliberate, and that his employer, Max Kruschke had absolutely nothing to do with the crime. It is understood that Heidemann says the crime was committed where the body was found.

Negro Electrocuted.

John Sears, the half-breed, who murdered Rev. Amzi Armstrong, the venerable Dutch Neck clergyman, and his wife, Annie Armstrong, in their home last Thanksgiving eve, was last night electrocuted at the New Jersey State prison at Trenton. He was given but one shock.

GOV. WILSON MAY LIVE AT EDGEWATER

General E. Burd Grubb has closed Grassmere, his beautiful river front home at Edgewater, near Burlington, and has moved into his official residence as commander of the Soldiers' Home at Kearney. There is a report that Governor Wilson may select the Grubb mansion as a year-round executive residence, and may occupy the place within a few weeks.

Mrs. Wilson is said to have chosen Edgewater Park as the most desirable location for a home during the governor's term, and only the fact that they could find no suitable residence there is said to have prevented the Wilsons leaving Princeton.

ANGER.

Our anger and our impatience often prove much more mischievous than the very things about which we become angry or impatient.—Marcus Aurelius.

The South Sea Finger Bowl.

Civilized man did not invent the finger bowl either in form or in use. It was used in the south sea islands some hundreds of years before Europeans and Americans found out that they were necessary to their own refinement. A bowl of water is handed around to every diner in a south sea house. This south sea finger bowl is half a cocoanut shell, beautiful, useful, practically unbreakable, yet not of sufficient worth to prevent its being thrown away tomorrow and replaced by a fresh one from the nearest palm. —Harper's Weekly.

The Pelican.

No one would be likely to imagine that so heavy and, in fact, apparently ungainly a bird as a pelican is a king among soaring birds. After much flopping when these great birds have acquired headway the broad wings are spread, and in majestic circles they mount skyward, with only an occasional flap of the wing, often passing beyond the range of one's vision.

Wall Papers.

Stamped paper for wall decoration was first made in Spain or Holland or simultaneously in both countries, about 1555. For some reason this earliest form of wall paper was succeeded by wall hangings of velvet and floss about 1620. About a century later paper came into vogue again, but it is only for the past fifty years or so that the papering of the walls of houses has been general.

The Philatelist In Love.

The normal young man is generally desirous of meeting a girl of the right stamp, yet the Paris Figaro advertisement below wears the air of novelty:

"A collector of postage stamps, possessing 12,544 specimens, desires to contract a marriage with a young lady, also a collector, who has the blue Mauritius stamp of 1847. No other need apply."

An Imposition.

Aged four, she walked into the baker's shop with great alacrity and looked on with evident signs of pleasure while her mother bought a pound of cookies. But her pleasure turned to disgust when informed that she was not to be allowed to eat any.

"Why, you don't s'pose I went in there to buy cookies for a paper bag, do you?" demanded the indignant tot. —Washington Post.

Quite Deliberate.

"I am glad to say," remarked Mr. Seekton, "that I never spoke a hasty word to you."

"No, Leonidas," answered his wife rather gently; "I'm willing to give you credit for not hurrying about anything."

SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

Mr. Anderson will soon remove from the Irving Laing farm. It has been sold to the Twin State Realty Company of Park Row, New York, which is laying it out in building plots.

Since the breakage in the New Market mill dam, Dave Blackford has been grinding all feed at his home for the New Market mill.

Nelson Faulks has sold his former home in Elizabeth, and expect to build a larger and much handsomer one.

The Ladies' Aid and Women's Foreign Missionary societies of the Park Avenue Baptist church will hold an all-day sewing and business meeting tomorrow, with election of officers in the afternoon.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

PAYING A PAINTER.

Verrio's Reward For Decorating Two English Royal Palaces.

Rubens received for his painting of the grand ceiling at the banqueting house, Whitehall, the sum of £4,000. The space covered by this painting is about 400 yards, so that he was paid nearly £10 a yard. In addition to this remuneration, he was knighted, and a chain of gold was also presented to him by Charles I.

Sir James Thornhill, the first Englishman who received knighthood for his ability in art, was paid only £3 a yard for the laborious work on the ceiling of Greenwich hospital and only £1 a yard for painting the ornaments on the walls. "The Duke of Montague," says Sir James Thornhill in his memorial to the commissioners for building the hospital, "paid M. Rosso for his saloon £2,000 and kept an extraordinary table for him, his friends and servants for two years while the work was being done at an expense estimated at £500 per annum."

Signor Verrio was paid for the whole palaces of Windsor and Hampton court—ceilings, front and back stairs—at 8 shillings a square foot, which is £3 12s. a yard, exclusive of gilding; had wine daily allowed to him, lodgings in the palaces and when his eyesight failed him a pension of £200 per annum and an allowance of wine for life.—Pearson's Weekly.

HER PRETTY TEETH.

They Are All Her Very Own, and the Dentist Has a Grievance.

"Men in every other profession and business have the advantage of dentists in the matter of advertising," said a man with forceps in his hand. "They can persuade good looking young women to wear their goods for photographic purposes; the dentist cannot. The whitest, evenest set of false teeth ever made cannot tempt a woman to wear them and be photographed with her mouth wide open.

"Manufacturers of cosmetics and artificial hair are besieged by women who are willing to daub their faces with paint and powder and build their heads out with puffs and braids into any style of architecture desired for photographic advertisements. Neither do they balk at patent wearing apparel. The most absurd garment ever invented can find somebody to pose in it before the camera. But false teeth are universally blacklisted.

"Every woman who gets photographed with her mouth spread into a smile wants people to think that the teeth she shows are her own, and the dentist who would dare to label the picture 'These teeth made by Dr. Blank' would lay grounds for a libel suit."—New York Times.

Books on a Shelf.

Books are frequently ruined through carelessness. This is less in the handling often than upon the shelves. Books should not be packed tightly on a shelf. It ruins the back and causes them to tear loose with the strain of getting in and out. Often it forces the leaves to sag to the shelf when pushed unduly. It is just as bad for books to be too loose on a shelf, as they warp, and the spreading leaves encourage dust. A bookcase with the contents at every angle is not a pleasing sight. There are some housekeepers who think a yearly dusting of the books at housecleaning time sufficient. This is bad enough when they are kept under glass; when on open shelves it means ruin to valuable books. It takes a little longer to dust the backs and tops of books on each shelf every day. Use a soft cheesecloth or silk duster and shake it frequently.—London Globe.

Good Clothes and Good Morals.

It is doubtful whether any one to whom soap and water and more or less tidy clothes are a matter of course can rightly estimate the extent to which this question of clothes and cleanliness bears upon the criminality of youths. Dirty, ragged garments, greasy caps and neck scarfs worn day after day without the possibility of a change are, I believe, responsible for much. Certain it is that the lad who is content with but one set of raiment invariably belongs to a very low stratum of society, and the absence of a desire for a Sunday suit and the unabashed wearing of the weekday suit on the Sunday is very frequently indeed the mark of one largely impervious to outside influences.—C. E. B. Russell in "Young Goal Birds."

It Is Just a Habit.

"I suppose, Eileen," she remarked to the new girl, with feigned indifference, "that you overheard my husband and me conversing rather earnestly this morning. I hope, however, that you did not think anything unusual was going on?"

"Niver a bit, mum. Oi wanst had a husband meself, an' niver a day passed that th' neighbors didn't belave one or th' other uv us would be kilt entoirly."—Success Magazine.

The Charm of England.

It is not strange that Englishmen should be, as certainly they are, passionate lovers of their country, for their country is almost beyond parallel—peaceful, gentle and beautiful. Even in vast London, where practical life asserts itself with such prodigious force, the stranger is impressed in every direction with a sentiment of repose and peace.—William Winter.

A Mrs. S—— after selecting her outfit and learning the total cost from our plainly marked price tags, said she preferred to make comparisons elsewhere before ordering, to which we readily agreed, for it's a thing we always URGE!

On getting another store's prices (where they were marked in private signs) she found ours were far less, and SAID so. The salesman promptly dropped to our figures—AND GOT THE ORDER.

Here, where there's but ONE PLAINLY MARKED PRICE ON EVERY ITEM, such an "accommodating" and sudden price drop would be impossible—here, when you read the price tag, you KNOW it's already at lowest point, for ALL prices are made and REMAIN on the SAME UNIFORMLY SMALL PROFIT BASIS. We don't HAVE to run a "leader" here and there for an hour, or a day, to catch trade, as ALL lines are equally good values EVERY day in the year!

Historic Beauties.

The famous beauties of the world are wise when they leave no portraits of themselves. Take Marguerite of Valois. She was an immoral, dishonorable, criminal, scheming, unscrupulous villainess, but she was dowered with such charm that there was not a jailer or an enemy she could not charm when she tried. No, nor a woman—not even the wives of her lovers. Men came from every country, taking year long journeys, only to see her and went away, after a little glimpse, saying they had "seen loveliness itself." Then one sees her portraits. Too much forehead, not enough eyebrow, a straight nose and expressive mouth (in one picture a lovely mouth)—and that is all. Mary, queen of Scots, was very lovely—three kingdoms battled because of her beauty—and yet her pictures leave one cold. Fouche said her portrait showed every trait of the lowest criminal type. That was before he knew whose picture he criticised.—London Truth.

Lost Meanings.

"Those who care for the beginnings of things may be glad that the quill pen survives to remind us that the original pen was plucked from a bird," observes a writer. "Germans and Frenchmen are in no danger of forgetting that, thanks to their respective words 'feder' and 'plume,' but the English 'pen' suggests a feather only when one chooses to think about it and recall the Latin 'penna.' Almost all our writing materials are no longer what etymologically they profess to be. Paper is no longer made of papyrus; a pencil is not a little tail 'penicillus,' like a camel's hair brush; the 'lead' of a lead pencil is not lead, and the 'india rubber' with which we erase its marks does not and never did come from India. Even of parchment there is probably not a fragment in the country, except, perhaps, in a museum and coming from Pergamum, in Asia."—Chicago News.

Life In the Icy Arctic.

In the morning I was generally the one to waken first and would either start the alcohol lamp myself or call Astrup for that purpose. Our morning meal consisted of a lump of pemmican, six biscuits, two ounces of butter and two cups of tea each. As soon as this was finished everything was repacked on the sledge. I then read the odometer, aneroid and thermometer and, taking the guidon, which had waved and fluttered over the kitchen throughout our hours of rest, from its place, stepped forward and the next march was commenced. After from four to six hours of marching we would halt for half an hour to eat our simple lunch of pemmican and give the dogs a rest and then after four to six hours of traveling halt again and repeat the already described route.—Robert E. Peary, "The Great White Journey."

Got Rid of the Scum.

She was a city bride who had never before taken a hand in housekeeping and knew but little about things in the kitchen. A few mornings ago she got after the milkman.

"What's the matter with your milk?" she said, with great vehemence.

"I don't know," he replied. "What do you find wrong with it?"

"Well," she said, "every morning it is covered with a nasty yellow scum."

"And what do you do with the scum?"

"Why, I skim it off, of course, and throw it in the garbage can."—Farmers' Guide.

Sacrificing the Woman.

That Carlyle could contemplate with equanimity being unpraised, unmoneyed and neglected all his life, that he required neither the world's pudding nor its breath and could be happy without them, was pardonable and perhaps commendable. That he should expect another person to share this unmoneyed, puddingless and rather forlorn condition was scarcely consistent with such lofty principles. Men may sacrifice themselves, if they please, to imagined high duties and ambitions, but they have no right to marry wives and sacrifice them.—Exchange.

How People Die.

It is estimated that the average duration of human life is thirty-three years. A quarter of the people die during the seventh year and half before the seventeenth. Of every 1,000 persons one only reaches 100 years, six in 100 get to 65 and one in 500 to 80. It is further estimated that throughout the world 50,000,000 die annually, 138,000 a day, nearly 6,000 an hour, 90 a minute, or three in every two seconds.

Discretion.

Wife (whose husband, the local mayor, has just been knighted)—Have you heard from the man who offered to trace our pedigree? Husband—Yes; he has found out more than enough. Wife—What did you pay him? Husband—Fifty pounds—to hold his tongue!—London Opinion.

The Desideratum.

"George, what do you have to do when you draw some money out of a bank?" asked an innocent young wife.

"You have to put some money in the bank beforehand," replied the husband. "That's always been my experience!"

A Friendly Tip.

"My husband always is the severest critic of the gowns I wear."

"Well, judging from what I have heard, he has to go some if he is."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Prejudice, which sees what it pleases, cannot see what is plain.—Aubrey de Vere.

A Desperate Game

By JOHN K. LEYS,

Copyright, 1903, by John K. Leys.

roscombe was delighted to find that the baronet rejected his half hearted offer to forego his claim to the castle and its contents. He longed to see the extent of his treasure, and as the baronet turned away he followed him out of the room.

Keeping a few yards in the rear, he followed Sir Rufus into the great hall, then along a narrow passage which was shut off from the hall by a heavy door, through another door at the farther end of the corridor and down a narrow stone staircase.

At the bottom of the stairs was a third door, which stood wide open, as though inviting them to enter.

"Over and over again," said the baronet, "I have told Jorrocks to shut and lock this door after him, but I suppose it is too much trouble. Jorrocks is past his best now, poor old man. Of course when you set up your establishment here you will have to get rid of him. But if I might offer a suggestion, I should say retain him as a porter or seneschal. It looks well in these days of millionaires to have a respectable old family servant. And, besides, you can't have Mrs. Jorrocks without her husband, and both as housekeeper and cook the woman is simply invaluable."

All this talk was delightfully flattering in the ears of the London lawyer. He had not really meant to deprive Sir Rufus of his ancestral seat; but, since he was taking the matter so coolly, why should he, Foscombe, be quixotic? How delightful it would be to speak of "my place, Ravenscrag castle," at his club, and become a country gentleman!

With such rosy dreams floating before his inward eyes Foscombe never noticed that the cellars they had already passed through were rather extensive and that quite a journey seemed to be necessary before one could get a bottle of port.

"Here we are at last," said Sir Rufus. "These are the port bins. There is some fine old madeira over there which ought to be very valuable in a few years. I am sorry to say there is no champagne, but the port is first rate. That is '84, the last, I believe, that was laid down. This is '70, and these two bins are '63. Now we come to the glorious '47, one of the finest wines ever known. Just hold the light, will you, and I will get out a couple of bottles."

The baronet had quietly slipped behind his guest, so that he was now nearer to the door. Foscombe took the light unsuspiciously. Sir Rufus placed one foot on one of the apertures and made a motion as though he would spring upward, so as to reach a bottle over his head, but instead of doing so he pretended to miss his footing and stumble backward, and, in doing so, with a sudden movement of his hand he knocked the candle down; then, while Foscombe stooped for it, he fled with swift and nearly silent feet in the direction of the door.

By the time Foscombe realized what was happening he had reached it. The lawyer uttered a wild scream, started forward and rushed for the entrance. But he was too late. Before he could reach the door it was slammed to with a horrid clang, and the massive bolt was shot home in the lock.

Then a loud peal of laughter echoed through that gloomy place, and while Foscombe stood horror struck, trembling and dumfounded behind the door he heard a shout of "I wish you joy of your new possessions, my good traitor!" A few seconds later another door clanged farther away. Then there was silence.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

IN THE DUNGEON.

For a few seconds the lawyer stood stupefied. The event that had occurred was so utterly outside his ideas of what was possible or conceivable that he was deprived of the power of reasoning.

But this state of collapse did not last long. The deadly chill of the vault in which he had been immured made him shiver and roused him to action, and after cursing his treacherous host with curses bitter and deep he scratched the only match he had on the chased surface of his watch—the stones around him were damp—and soon found the candle, which he lighted.

The cellar was simply a large vault built on the edge of the cliff and forming in reality the lowest story of the lake side of the castle. The door which Sir Rufus had closed and locked behind him was so strong, thick and heavy that attack upon it was hopeless.

The outer wall was fully three feet thick. Foscombe could judge of it by the depth of the single window, which was not above his reach, but was too high to look out of comfortably. The base of it was just a little below the level of his eyes. But he saw that when daylight appeared it would be easy to get an extended view of the lake by placing one foot in a wine bin, catching hold of the iron stanchion which ran up the center of the window, and hoisting himself up. He grasped the stanchion with one hand, tried the experiment and in doing so made a further discovery. Unless he was greatly mistaken the stanchion had trembled slightly under his weight. If that were so it would surely be possible to wrench it away.

Again and again he tugged at the iron upright till his arms ached with the exertion, and at length he satisfied himself that the thing was really loose. The aperture which it protected was not very narrow. A very little bending of it to one side would give a space which he reckoned at eight or nine inches. Surely he should be able to squeeze himself through.

The thought that he might outwit the crafty baronet acted like a strong cordial to the imprisoned man. He might even be able to save Eva from him and win her gratitude, her love. All things, he told himself, were yet possible if he only could get out of that cursed vault.

Carefully, foot by foot, he searched, candle in hand, the floor of the cellar in hope of finding a rusty nail with which to dig away the stone and mortar about the stanchion. But no such thing was to be seen. Nails there were in plenty in the woodwork of the wine bins, but it was impossible for him to get them out.

Returning to the window, Foscombe placed the candle on the floor and cowered down beside it in a fit of deep dejection. The silence pressed like a weight on his brain. What if Sir Rufus should leave him to die there of hunger and thirst? The thought was horrible, maddening! The prisoner rose to his feet, and, turning toward the unglazed window, he sent forth cry after cry. He did not use any words. They were mere animal-like screams.

Soon Foscombe realized that he was wasting his strength. It would be much more sensible, he saw, to wait till daylight. Then people would be moving about, and he would have some chance of attracting their attention.

Shivering, as much from fear as from cold, he once more cowered down beside the friendly flame of the candle, and presently it occurred to him that one means of cheering and warming himself was within his reach. Why should he not have a bottle of the famous '47 port after all?

He took out a bottle, stripped it of its straw covering and dashed the neck against the wall. It broke off close to the wide part, and the generous liquor spurted over his hand and arm. But he was not particular as to the manner of drinking, and soon he felt warmed and heartened by the rich grape juice. He drank nearly all that was left in the bottle and was in the act of placing it in a corner when his eye fell on the broken bottle neck lying at a little distance.

In an instant it flashed upon his mind that this was the very thing he needed. With a cry he pounced on it, and the next moment he was chipping away at the stone and mortar that were closest to the bottom of the stanchion.

The bottle neck made an excellent tool, smooth and large to the grip and sharp and hard as a diamond in the cutting part. That he was making some progress the dust and small fragments that came tumbling down proved abundantly. Progress was slow, but certain, and after an hour's work he had the satisfaction of finding that the stanchion was really loosened. A little more and the fastening at the foot gave way. To bend it aside was a more difficult job than he had expected, but in time this, too, was accomplished. The prisoner felt sure that so far as the walls of his prison were concerned he was already a free man. All he had to do now was to sit down and wait for daylight. Tired out with his exertions, he fell asleep. He was awakened by a noise and raised himself on his elbow, listening.

The gray dawn was stealing through the narrow windows of the cellar. He heard footsteps, then the rattle of a key as it was inserted in a lock, then the loud grating of the bolt as it was drawn back. He sprang to his feet. Who could it be but his enemy, Sir Rufus? The light of revenge burned in his eyes, but the next moment it died away. It was not the door of his cellar that had been opened, but that of the next one, and now he could hear footsteps on the other side of the dividing wall drawing nearer.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

NORA IN DANGER.

Nora arrived in London tired with her long journey, sad at heart and greatly inclined to wish that she had remained in Ireland. True, it was easier, much easier, to gain employment in London than in Dublin, but, then, she knew so little, and she had no recommendation. The terms on which Lady Roscommon and she had been when she left Castle Dare made her very unwilling to ask her ladyship for even the smallest favor, and indeed she felt certain that to ask for anything in the nature of a testimonial would have been practically useless.

There was only one person in or near London who knew her whose recommendation would carry any weight, and that was Father Morris of Kingstown, the priest who had attended her stepfather on the night he was shot. She called on him.

Father Morris remembered her at once and received her kindly, and after he had given her a certificate as to character he sat with his hands folded before him, regarding her over the top of his spectacles.

"And what have you been doing since I saw you last?" he asked, speaking with a strong Irish accent.

"I have been maid to Lady Roscommon," said Nora.

"You don't say that, now?" said the priest in a tone of surprise, bending farther forward in his chair. "The family that used to live at Hampton Place?"

"The same family, father; but latterly we've been living at Castle Dare, in Ireland."

WHAT CURES ECZEMA?

We have had so many inquiries lately regarding Eczema and other skin diseases, that we are glad to make our answer public. After careful investigation we have found that a simple wash of Oil of Wintergreen, as compounded in D. D. D., can be relied upon. We would not make this statement to our patrons, friends and neighbors unless we were sure of it—and although there are many so-called Eczema remedies sold, we ourselves unhesitatingly recommend D. D. D. Prescription.

Because—We know that it gives instant relief to that torturing itch.

Because—D. D. D. starts the cure at the foundation of the trouble.

Because—It cleanses, soothes and heals the skin, clearing away pimples and blotches over night.

Because—It enables Nature to repair the ravages of disease.

Because—The records of ten years of complete cures of thousands of the most serious cases show that D. D. D. is today recognized as the absolutely reliable Eczema Cure.

Drop into our store today, just to talk over the merits of this wonderful Prescription. We will also explain the value of D. D. D. as a household remedy.

Commencing tonight the senior department will take part in a handicap swimming meet extending over a period of nine weeks. The following events will be run off every Thursday night, all handicap, so that the poorest swimmers will have a show with the god ones. First, second and third prizes will be offered:

March 16, 23 yard swim; 23, 46 yard swim; 30, 69 yard swim; April 6, dive for form and plunge for distance; 20, 115 yard swim; 27, egg and spoon race; May 4, gym suit race, full gym suit; 11, 23 yard back stroke; 18, 46 yard breast stroke.

Y.M.C.A. BALL SEASON TO OPEN APRIL 20

The Y. M. C. A. baseball team will open the season on Saturday April 22, at Crescent Oval, with a game with the Bedford Branch Y. M. C. A. team, of Brooklyn. Physical Director T. G. Whittaker is hard at work getting details in shape for the opening and he says that the association will be represented by a strong team.

The principal pitcher will doubtless be Frederickson, who did such good work last year, and Hand will be at the receiving end. Among others who will probably be found in the lineup will be Peacock, Coyle, Bailey, Smith, Fritts, Hervey Marsh, Adams and possibly the Freeman boys, who are now at Yale. It is also possible that Slocum may do some box work for the nine, but the matter is not fully settled as yet. The game on April 22 will be the first one of importance and efforts are being directed to make it an auspicious event.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

Through the resignation of Gardner Bristol there was a vacancy on the advisory board of the Athletic Association. Herbert Terry was elected yesterday to fill the postion.

At the meeting of the grand council yesterday it was decided to make the conditions governing the "Special Work Day" more lenient. The council is composed of pupils and teachers and the special work day was instituted several months ago, for the benefit of students who are found to be weak on any special subject, allowing those who were weak to have the day devoted to the subject on which they were not efficient. The new conditions will be easier to secure and will be of more benefit to the school under the conditions secured yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred McKeegan, of Cohoes, N. Y., are visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Allen, of West Seventh street.

Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Hoffman will remove shortly from the Manning building to Mrs. Charlotta DeMeza's house on West Second street, near New. Mrs. DeMeza will remove to the property of her son, City Judge William G. DeMeza, on Duer street.

ANOTHER LECTURE ON BOY PROBLEM

Rev. Franklin K. Mathiews will deliver the third of a series of five talks to mothers of boys in Y. M. C. A. Hall tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. His topic will be "Tempting the Boy to Obey, or the Art of Making Commands Attractive." The synopsis follows:

1. The boy thirsts for virtue as well as knowledge; developing capacity for good conduct; cheerful obedience—good manners not always good morals; demanding much and expecting little—why some children so often forget; the appeal to reason—when do boys come to the understanding age?

2. The courtesy of commands—the danger of provoking children to wrath; "light" not "lightening" needed; how "well begun is half done"—interest in commands creats energy to meet the effort required; the moral obligation of parents to present precepts in appealing, pleasing ways—the commandments of God, the appeal for educational methods—no plea for "soft commands" "for the young apt to be most sincere at an age when they are also most mistaken;" parents must compel what children will later wish to compel themselves to do—the timeliness of the "Eternal Don't"; the place of a women's institution in making commands attractive—how maternal ingenuity supplements pedegogic strategy.

All mothers of boys also school teachers will be welcome.

BLAZE IN ELIZABETH CAUSES $30,000 LOSS

Fire of unknown origin swept through the old shops of the Central Railroad, at Front, South Park and Bond streets, in Elizabeth yesterday afternoon shortly after 5 o'clock and before the flames were extinguished damage to the amount of $30,000 was done. Two firemen who were near the building when it collapsed were severely injured. The fire burned for five hours before it was completely under control.

Fire Chief Gerstung was convinced upon his arrival that the building in which the fire originated was doomed, bent his efforts to save surrounding property. The buildings along the water front are chiefly devoted to manufacturing purposes and thousands of dollars worth of machinery was in danger, but the herculean work of the smoke eaters prevented the spread of flames. Many employees of the various plants aided the Elizabeth firemen in fighting the flames and were complimented by Chief Gerstung for the work. It is believed that the blaze started in the boiler room of the Railroad building.

SPEAKERS ANNOUNCED FOR MISSION JUBILEE

The jubilee of the Women's National Foreign Missionary Association which will be held in Trinity Reformed church on Friday next, afternoon and evening, promises to be an interesting event. The purpose of the jubilee is to raise one million dollars for foreign missions during the present year and to discuss the problems which confront the workers in the foreign missionary field today and to get an enlarged vision of the work itself.

Among those who will speak are Mrs. Helen M. Montgomery, president of the Long Island Women's Missionary Society; Dr. Mary Carleton, of China; Rev. Lewis R. Scudder, of India and others to be announced later. Mrs. James R. Joy will preside at the afternoon session which begins at 3 o'clock and Mrs. Frederick G. Mead will conduct the exercises in the evening beginning at 8 o'clock.

ICE CREAM MAKERS FIGHT AGAINST BILL.

Confectionery and ice cream makers appeared before the House labor and industries committee at Trenton yesterday to ask that their products be eliminated from the 1907 bake shop law. This law forbids the manufacture of these goods in shops under ground.

The Federation of Labor, of which Mr. Ford, chairman of the House Industries committee, is State president, long fought for the bake shop act and will be opposed to any changes in it. Henry Mahnken, of West Hoboken, and Messrs. Plump and Endemann, of Jersey City, asked that the bill be passed.

On account of the illness of three of the members of the cast the entertainment entitled "New England Folks," to have been given at Dunellen has been postponed indefinitely

Miss Hattie Filmer, a teacher in the Irving School was summoned to her home at Gloversville, N. Y. yesterday, on account of the death of her brother

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

Quite the best thing that indefatigable trio, Hough, Adams and Howard have done is the musicals play, "The Time, the Place and the Girl," which will be offered at the Plainfield theatre, Saturday matinee and night. This play must be placed in a class by itself, a story with music, fairly bubbling and sparkling with witty lines, a clever plot and many popular and catchy airs.

Three car loads of scenery, a company of ninety-five people and an orchestra of twenty-five musicians are a few things that Jos. M. Gaites promises in his new musical play "Bright Eyes," which will be the attraction at the Plainfield theatre for one night only, Monday evening, March 20. The new play is by the authors of Mr. Gaites' former great success, "Three Twins," as well as "The Girl of My Dreams" and "Madame Sherry," and in the few cities where it was seen last season it was heralded a worthy companion piece to the famous "Three Twins."

One of the elements of "The Spendthrift's" tremendous success, which will be seen at the Plainfield theatre Tuesday night, March 21, is the skillful manner of its presentation. Frederic Thompson is gifted with rare judgment in the casting of a play and he has never selected to better purpose. Edmund Breese has the role of Richard Ward, a power in finance, and the part might have been written for him, so well does it fit his emthods. His portrayal is unquestionably one of the triumphs of a brilliant career.

Thermometer Dropped 32 Degrees.

Just at a time when everyone was expecting and looking forward to an early spring the elements kicked up in lively fashion last night and today during which time the thermometer dropped 32 degrees. Yesterday the weather was real spring like, today it is winter for fair and everyone was obliged to hunt up their warmest clothing, while householders had to pile on more coal to make things comfortable. The weather predictions are for continued cold

INSTAL A PASTOR

Induction Service for Rev. Frederick L. Greene at Hope Chapel.

MANY MINISTERS TAKE PART.

Rev. Frederic L. Greene was formally installed as pastor of Hope chapel at an induction service, last evening. The chapel was thronged with members and friends, including many from other churches throughout the city. Those seated on the platform were Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, of the Crescent Avenue church; Rev. F. D. Tildon, of Bethel chapel; Rev. Dr. C. E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian church, and Rev. C. L. Goodrich, of the Congregational church.

Following the invocation and Lord's Prayer, Scripture reading and prayer by Rev. F. D. Tildon, the constitutional questions were put to Mr. Greene by Dr. Zelie. The charge to the pastor was also made by Dr. Zelie, whose remarks were full of helpful advice. He pointed out the pastor's duties to the congregation. Dr. Zelie concluded his remarks with the minimum of advice and the maximum of welcome.

The charge to the congregation was given by Dr. Herring. He began his remarks by recalling the charge delivered to him several years ago by the late Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, who on that occasion said: "Surely that a minister carrying onward the work of the Lord was like a minister who started up a steep hill. In the beginning with the united aid, help and enthusiasm of his congregation, the long pull up the steep hill was begun, the members pushed, while the minister pulled. Everything started off splendidly, but by and by the load grew heavy and still the pastor pulled along, when three-quarters up the hill the minister looked around and found as many of his congregation that could do so inside the carraige enjoying the ride up the hill."

"This," said Dr. Herring, "is particularly true of every minister starting out unused to his flock. Every member has to feel his own personal sense of responsibility and helpfulness and exercise it and Mr. Greene's work would be helped so much by such an attitude exhibited by the members of the chapel."

Rev. Mr. Goodrich extended a welcome to the new pastor on behalf of other churches and said many pleasant things about the chapel and its work. Preceding the prayer by Mr. Greene, Dr. Zelie presented to him on behalf of the Ladies' Aid Society, a beautiful silk pulpit gown. The gift was a great surprise to Mr. Greene. After the benediction by Mr. Greene all adjourned to the Sunday school room, where the new pastor and wife held an informal reception.

Donald McInnes, chairman of the committee, made a brief speech of welcome, referring to the fact that the chapel was built twenty-three years ago in January. He also spoke of the loyalty of the members, especially during the months they were without a pastor. At the conclusion of his remarks he presented Mrs. Greene with a beautiful bouquet of carnations. Mr. Greene made a happy response. G. Herbert Condict, superintendent of the Sunday-school, also made a few remarks appropriate to the occasion.

The Crescent Avenue church was well represented at the service and reception, including the following who have been indentified with the work at the chapel for many years: A. J. Gavett, F. H. Andrews, John Leal, E. E. Parvin, W. D. Murray, Howard McWilliams, H. O. Newman, J. H. Manning, A. W. Duxbury, Stephen H. Voorhees and George H. Beiser.

Refreshments were served during the reception by a committee comprising Donald McInnes, chairman; James Penny, Charles Vincent, Harry Keen, William Baker, Willard H. Cook, Charles Hughes, George Leighs, Thomas Hendry, Mrs. Donald McInness, Mrs. W. S. Terry, Mrs. James Heron, Mrs. Robert Gray, Mrs. William Stickles, Mrs. William Jones, Mrs. James Busby, Miss Mary Mortimer, Miss Jessie Duncan, Robert Baillie, Alexander Doig, David Dardrop and George Leighs, Jr.

Another C. E. Congress.

YAMA YAMA CLUB HOLDS ANNUAL BALL

Under canopies of beautiful plants and flowers and in a hall that was handsomely decorated the Yama Yama Club held its second annual ball last night. Long before 10 o'clock, the hour set for the grand march, the floor was alive with dancers and from then on until 4 o'clock this morning the fun continued.

It was remarked that Saengerbund Hall had never been so gorgeously arrayed as it was last night. Green streamers and flags emblazoned with golden harps paid a tribute to the honor of St. Patrick. Intertwined among the streamers were red, white and blue flags and bunting and with the stage profusely illuminated with Japanese lanterns and decorated with flags the whole scene was a marvel of beauty.

The grand march was led by C. E. Pagliuca and Miss Montagne, D. D. Weiss with Miss Anna Darling; Jack Alster and Miss Carter and L. R. Hamilton with Miss Evelyn Porter. There were twenty-eight numbers on the dance program and the music was furnished by Suhr's Imperial orchestra. The ball was voted superior to that of last year from every viewpoint. The officers of the club are: President, George Egle; vice-president, Percy Haberle; secretary, D. D. Weiss; treasurer, C. E. Pagliuca. L. R. Hamilton was floor manager.

HIRAM'S SOLILOQUY SCORES AT C.E. SOCIAL

A largely attended social was held by the Christian Endeavor Society of Trinity Reformed church in the Sunday school rooms last evening at which a splendid program of music and games was enjoyed. It was pronounced the best sociable ever held by the society. An original poem by Miss Marie Hahn which will be found below was one of the features of the entertainment. Refreshments followed the games.

This was the program: Selection, orchestra; spiral shakedown, led by A. W. Dunavan; piano solo, Ida Randolph Smalley; selection, orchestra; reading, "Soliloquy On a Dime," Miss Hahn; laughing game, by the entire company.

The affair was in charge of the entertainment committee composed of Elmer Gayle, chairman; Marie Hahn, Mrs. A. W. Dunavan, Misses Elsie and Myra Dunavan, May Randolph, Leroy Layton, Russell Doeringer, A. W. Dunavan and Arthur Gaskill.

Miss Edna Dilts was awarded a C. E. pin for making the greatest number of correct guesses in the "Dime" game.

HIRAM'S SOLILOQUY ON A DIME

Just a dime ain't much tu look at
Nor it don't seem much to own.
But it keeps yu always on the scratch
Tu get enough tu keep yu goin',
When yure single then yu spend them fast,
When yure double things change about,
Yu count 'em over, and make 'em last
Till with handlin' there most worn out.

Show me a fello' that's out a'sparkin'
An' I'll show yu a bank in his jeans,
That he's savin' his coins in tu go a'larkin',
An' for buyin' his gal chocolate creams.
An' show me a lass that flushes up red,
When'eer a young lad heaves in sight,
She's not spendin' her dimes; but savin' instead
An' markets for lingerie white.

Maybe yure out astrollin' along,
An' are goin' across a street,
A'whistlin' a merry little song,
When yu see somethin' shine at yure feet.
Yu think, "Gosh, what a cinch of a find,"
An' are stoopin' tu pick the dime up,
When an' auto hits yu frum behind,
An' the ambulance comes on a gallop.

Or p'raps yuve been tu the city, too.
An' someone strikes yu for a dime,
An' tells a pitiful story to you,
'Bout sick wife' and children nine.
Yu fish out a coin and give it tu him
An' he thanks yu an' beats away,
An' you find that while yure eyes were tear dimmed,
He's took your watch, chain an' week's pay.

WALK FOR HEALTH

Edward Weston, World's Champion Pedestrian, Gives Some Advice.

LECTURE TO BROTHERHOOD.

Edward Payson Weston, famous for nearly fifty years as a pedestrian, appeared at the First M. E. church, last night, under the auspices of the Brotherhood, and for more than an hour entertained a large audience by relating interesting incidents in his life as a long distance walker. Mr. Weston was introduced by James R. Joy. There were many persons in the audience who quickly recognized Mr. Weston, having seen him at various times, and he was greeted with hearty applause.

Defending the art of waking, Mr. Weston said that it was so cheap that most people won't try it. If a walking machine was on the market, the people would make a mad rush to purchase them. Mr. Weston said that his ambition in walking long distances was not purely a mercenary one, but that he wanted to show that man is not a weak creature as supposed. He said that he had walked over part of France, nearly the whole of England, as well as the United States and yet until the last four years there has been little interest in feats of walking. In the last year and a half he had covered about 7,500 miles.

The speaker recalled how in 1906 he walked from Philadelphia to New York, one hundred miles in twenty-four hours. He was then 68 years of age. Advocating walking as a healthful exercise, Mr. Weston said that it will change a man's disposition and make him better in every way. He said that it would save many a doctor's bill and was a sure cure for rheumatism.

Proving that walking will cure rheumatism, he said that he practiced walking between New York and Yonkers, twenty-eight miles and on the thirtieth day the trouble entirely disappeared.

"If you are going to walk in the country," said Mr. Weston, "don't get in the habit of asking farmers and others how far it is from one place to another. They will never agree and it will keep you gessing all the time."

Mr. Weston paid a great compliment to the young men and boys of this country, explaining that he had been followed by thousands of them and always treated with respect, but he could not say as much of the boys in England. He advised the boys to stop smoking paper cigarettes for the continued practice would sooner or later cause death.

Mr. Weston said that he had often been asked as to his diet when walking long distances, to which he replied he only had two meals a day, breakfast and supper, and for breakfast he generally ate two slices of bread, three boiled eggs, cup of coffee, some prunes, berries or oranges. These things he found to agree with him very well. He said that the average American business man always puts business before eating or pleasure, that it is one mad race from the cradle to the grave and the fellow who gets there first, leaving the other one to pay his funeral expenses, wins out.

Referring to the fact that he never took long walks on Sunday, he said that early in life he promised his mother that he would never do this and he had always followed that rule. Throughout his talk he described little incidents concerning his trips and told many amusing stories.

At the close of the talk, all present were given a chance to meet Mr. Weston. J. W. Harrison, of Central avenue, made a few remarks, recalling that he had seen Mr. Weston walk in England and substantiating his declaration that he never used liquor. As to Mr. Weston's remarks about the English, Mr. Harrison said that he hoped the audience would take them as a joke.

Expressmen On Strike.

A general strike was called this morning of all the wagon drivers employed by the various express companies in New York. The men who went out this morning had declared only on Wednesday that they would not take part in any demonstration against the Adams Company, but they failed to live up to this agreement and walked out this morning. The local office of the United States Express Company is not affected excepting as regards incoming freight. The local men are not affiliated with the unions.

Monthly "At Home."

The regular monthly "at home" was given in Warren chapel, last night. It was enjoyed by fifty members of the congregation. Rev. J. O. McKelvey was unable to be present because of illness and Mrs. McKelvey received. The former was able to be out today.

Pool Room Incorporates as Club Circumventing Proposed Ordinance.

NO SUPERVISION BY THE CITY.

Another club was added to the number of social organizations in this city last night and the latest addition promises to be one of the strongest yet organized. "The Krewson Club" is the name of the new organization and its papers of incorporation were filed with Secretary of State Dickinson on Monday last. The formation of the club has been under consideration for some weeks and it was brought to a head last night after the certificate was received.

At the meeting last evening which was held in Charles F. Krewson's billiard and pool rooms on West Front street, the election of officers resulted as follows: President, Dr. C. M. Lucky; vice-president, Roland Rockefellow; secretary, Raymond Guinn; treasurer, Lloyd Harris, counsel, Robert Newton Crane.

Mr. Crane was elected temporary chairman last evening and immediately proceeded to the formation of the organization. Three trustees were elected: James L. Conway, Russell Hazard and Charles J. Krewson. The incorporators are: J. L. Conway, Leon B. Harris, R. F. Hazard, J. G. Johnson, George McVoy, C. F. Krewson and L. C. Sackett.

The objects of the new organization as set forth in the incorporation papers is "to create and foster friendship and sociability among its members and maintain and encourage interest in the science of the games of billiards and pool."

Ninety members are already enrolled in the club and applications were filed last evening by ten more. The headquarters of the club will be in Krewson's rooms on West Front street. Charles F. Krewson was elected supervisor and chairman of the house committee and Mr. Krewson will be assisted on the latter committee by Leslie Sackett and W. Squires.

WIRELESS ASSO'N TO HOLD BANQUET

Induction coils, condensers, transformers and other paraphernalia of the wireless art were subjects which absorbed the interest of the members of the Wireless Association in Y. M. C. A. Hall last evening, but because of the pressure of other business, very little time was devoted to the subject. However, several interesting matters were disposed of including the announcement of the date for the association's first banquet. This will be held on Friday evening, March 24.

Because of the fear of parents that their boys would not be able to successfully cope with their school lessons after attending a meeting on Thursday evenings, the meeting night has been changed from Thursday to Friday. Twelve new members were added to the roll last night bringing the total membership up to 110. Charles E. Apgar, of Westfield, was elected to the directorate.

Charles G. August was elected temporary chairman for last night's meeting in the absence of James A. Wotton. The reports of the various committees showed the association to be forging ahead in every department. Designs for buttons to be worn by members were submitted, but no action was taken pending the arrival of other designs from a manufacturer out of town.

It was stated that someone had spread the report that there was a time limit put on the amateur wireless operator at night and that the government was the complaining party. Mr. August declared this to be a false impression. "The air is free," he said, "and you can use it to your hearts' content." By-laws, which are in course of preparation, will probably be ready for discussion at the next business meeting.

The following members forming an entertainment committee, will have the coming banquet in charge: Earl H. August, chairman; Benjamin Harris, Fred Clarke, Bernard Bartlett and John Platt, of Westfield; and H. B. Day and Augustus Parry, of Bound Brook.

Funeral of Mrs. W. H. VanWinkle.

The funeral of Mrs. William H. VanWinkle, aged 72 years, who died yesterday following a long illness, will be held at the late home, 28 Park place, Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

MORMANISM TALK

Miss Janet Richards Says Country is Threatened by Propagation of Creed.

ITS DISCIPLES INFLUENTIAL.

The Hartridge Auditorium was well filled yesterday afternoon when Miss Janet Richards, of Washington, D. C., gave her seventh talk on "Current History." She devoted part of the afternoon to an outline of the history of Mormonism and to the present active propaganda by Mormon officials who use all known methods of persuasion to induce girls and young women to settle in Utah. England particularly has to combat this scourge of Mormonism and when it is realized that no fewer than 1178 Mormon officials were busily engaged in house to house visits in England last year the alarm of the British officials is apparently well founded. The British government is trying to find means to exclude all Mormons and hopes under the "undesirable alien" act to be able to accomplish this object.

The problem in this country, she said, is one very much more difficult to solve in view of the fact that the Mormons are possessed of such wealth that they are an absolute power in the financial and political life of the Western States and even in Washington, where the Mormon vote in the Senate is used to turn the scale for which every party will show the greater favor to Mormonism. Some of our best known magazines have taken up this matter and are endeavoring to awaken the people to the danger threatening them in the spread of Mormonism as taught and practised by Brigham Young, whose record of public life, she said, shows him a traitor to his country and whose private life will not bear examination.

That the portrait of such a man should go out to the world, on the silver service of the battleship Utah, as a representative American, is an insult to every self respecting woman in America and also to the brave officers and men of the Navy, who have ever loyally defended our country from all foreign foes and all traitors at home.

Turning to the recently sixty-first Congress, Miss Richards said that while disappointing many in its failure to ratify the Canadian reciprocity treaty or to create a tariff board, still it had several noteworthy achievements to its credit, amongst which may be mentioned the appropriation for suitable homes for Ambassadors abroad, of $3,000,000; the conservation of the Appalachian and White Mountains; and the fortification of the Panama Canal as suggested by President Taft. This fortification of the canal at both ends is to cost the country some $3,000,000, beyond the cost of construction of the canal which is computed at $400,000,000.

The present disturbance in Mexico was briefly outlined by Miss Richards, who said that the movement of 20,000 troops and 17 ships to the Mexican frontier was in a measure, simply a test of the flexibility of our troops and at the same time a deterrent to prevent reinforcements of rebels crossing from the States into Mexico. Our present land force on the frontier being about three men to two miles of frontier, a force quite insufficient to prevent either men or ammunition crossing the border to foment the trouble.

Miss Richards spoke for a few minutes on the trial of forty-two Cammorists in Viterbo, Italy. These terible criminals are the originators of many of the black-hand outrages from which we in America suffer and are indeed the instigators of the murder of Detective Petrosino, two years ago. A jury has been impaneled but whether they will prove courageous enough to condemn these malfactors remains to be seen.

Miss Richards was most warmly applauded by her large audience at the close of the lecture. The next talk is to be Thursday, March 30.

Who Owns This Horse?

A runaway horse whose owner is still unknown by John Manley, who captured the animal, is being held in a local stable awaiting a claimant. The horse ran away yesterday afternoon on Park avenue and nearly reached the barn of the Hyde estate before he was captured.

SEEKING HEIRS TO AN ENGLISH ESTATE

An estate valued at $13,000 is being held in London, England, awaiting the claim of Mrs. Louisa Lee, or her heirs, who formerly lived in this city. They have been sought for but so far without success. N. H. Tunnicliffe, a lawyer, with offices at 26 Broadway, New York, has this matter charge and would gladly receive any information.

Mr. Tunnicliffe came to Plainfield yesterday, but inquiries at the usual sources of information proved fruitless. In conversation with a Daily Press reporter last night, he said that Mrs. Lee positivley lived in this city in 1880, when her relatives last heard of her. She was then sixty six years old and is now probably dead. She was born in London in 1814 and was the wife of Timothy Lee. There were six children in the family four sons and two daughters. The names of the sons were David, Timothy, Michael and Robert. The city directory does not contain any of these names and it is possible all may have left this locality. The names of the daughters are not known.

Anyone recalling the family or knowing the whereabouts of any of the children will confer a favor upon Mr. Tunnicliffe by addressing his New York office.

CLERGYMAN'S THOUGHT ON ST. PATRICK'S DAY

As a St. Patrick's day thought, Rev. St. John Fitch, tells what a splendid work can be done right here in Plainfield if the deeds of Father Sherman and Rev. Mr. Patterson be emulated. Here is his tribute to their laudable efforts for redeeming drunkards:

All loyal sons of Ireland, both Catholic and Protestant, commemorate the name and worthy deeds of Saint Patrick, who, by the grace of God, exterminated from their beautiful green isle, the poisonous pests arrayed against their moral and material welfare. Today there have arisen in that historic and beautiful island, two men of like temperament and ambition, but of different camps yet of the same great army of our Blessed Lord. I refer to Father Sherman, of the Roman Catholic host, and Rev. R. J. Patterson, L.L. B., of the Protestants.

The former has worked night, noon and morning with untiring zeal, as one of the leaders of the "Catholic Total Abstinence Society" of Ireland and with the aid of the faithful of his flock, has secured 250,000 signers to the temperance pledge. Inspired and stimulated by such efforts and results Rev. Mr. Patterson determined to enter the field and accomplish for Protestant Ireland what Father Sherman had for the Catholics.

The opportunity came. On the night of the thirteenth of July, 1909, Mr. Patterson was passing through the city square of Armagh, and under the large lamp post six men were talking and in jest one of them said to Mr. Patterson: "You ought to get those men to sign the pledge." To this off-hand and skeptical remark, Mr. Patterson answered: "All right old man, let us see what can be done." Right there and then he urged upon these six men the necessity and blessings of a sober life and an immediate decision to sign the pledge, to which they agreed to do. They were invited to the manse and accepted to come singly, but Mr. Patterson said it was better for all to come at the same time. Three days were given for them to consider and at the appointed time the ringing of the curfew, 9 p. m., Friday, these six men came, signed the Total Abstinence pledge and promised to return in a week with each, another pal addicted to drink. This they did on the Saturday following and at curfew twelve men turned up at the manse. Now the method of "the catch my pal" seized them. "The problem of the drink question is with the drunkard and his responsibility to reclaim him." This is inspiration of the entire movement.

The results have been unprecented and most encouraging. Over 150,000 are enrolled. Domestic peace and happiness restored. Liquor shops are being starved out for lack of patronage. Decreased sales cause decreased production; business flourishing; debts paid; souls converted and churches filled with reverent and grateful worshippers. The courthouse is largely vacated and the jails are likewise too large and roomy for the few placed there.

"The Catch my Pal" movement is rapidly extending not only all over Ireland, but of Scotland, England and Wales, even to the British colonies.

SUIT BY THE CITY

Proceedings to be Begun in Chancery to Stop Bldg. Encroachment

AGAINST MORRIS ABRAMS.

The Councilmanic fire and building committee, believing that the established building line on West Front street has been encroached upon by Morris Abrams, who is erecting a new building, adjoining that of Frank Linke, decided at its meeting last night to take legal steps to settle the question through a suit in chancery.

Frank Linke, an interested party, accompanied by his counsel, S. S. Swackhamer, and Frank J. Hubbard, a civil engineer, appeared before the committee and discussed the question at some length. Mayor G. W. V. Moy, who met with the committee, quoted the law showing that the city has a right to establish its rights in the matter. The law under which the city will proceed is as follows:

"It is undoubtably well settled as a general principle that the local authorities having charge of highways and public grounds may maintain ejectment against any person encroaching upon them." Chambersburg vs. Manko, 39 Law, pg. 498.

"The right to a similar remedy in equity was adjudged to be equally clear." Ry. vs. Greenwich, 10 C. E. Green, 565.

"The rights of the public in common property are vested in the municipal authorities, and if such rights cannot be enforced in their name, they cannot be enforced at all." The mayor, himself, may draw the papers for the city's suits.

The committee also discussed the question of securing an auto fire engine for the department, but nothing was decided upon. The rest of the evening was devoted to a consideration of minor matters. It was stated that the new horses for the Netherwood company would arrive today.

JACOB REINMANN'S FUNERAL HELD YESTERDAY.

The funeral of Jacob Reinmann, whose death occurred at his home in Mount Bethel, Monday, after a brief illness, was held at the Mount Bethel church, yesterday afternoon. It was conducted by Rev. Peter Gibb, of Millington, and was attended by a large gathering of relatives and friends, many of the latter coming from this city. A quartet rendered four selections during the service. There were numerous floral tributes, among them set pieces from Fairview Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., of Mount Bethel, and Court Plainfield, No. 1144, I. O. F., of which he was a member. Burial was made in the church cemetery, the pall bearers being three members from each of the two organizations.

Mr. Reinmann was forty-eight years old and had lived near Mount Bethel all his life. He was a dealer in rough and dressed lumber and telephone poles. He was prominent in all the affairs of the township and at the time of his death was a member of the Warren Board of Education. He is survived by his wife, three sons and a daughter, also a sister, and two brothers, one of whom is John Reinmann, of the borough.

PHYSICAL EXERCISE IN CITY HIGH SCHOOL.

Physical strength tests, non-competitive, were inaugurated today in the City High School after it was found that many of the pupils were not taking part in the athletics of the school. Under the new system boys will receive honors for performances in the various athletic events provided they pass certain points in the limits placed upon them.

It is proposed to hold strength tests twice a year, once in the spring and again in the autumn. They will be conducted in three classes and every pupil passing the required standards will receive a silver medal for passing in the first class; a button and certificate for passing the tests of the second class and certificate only for passing the third class tests.

Fire At Mali Residence.

A still alarm was received at fire headquarters at 11:40 this morning for a fire at the former Johnston residence on East Front street, occupied in the summer by Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Mali. Painters at work burning off the exterior decorating, started a blaze in one of the columns of the main porch. The firemen were compelled to do considerable cutting to get at the flames and the damage will probably reach $300.

Truthful Advertising

All eyes are focused upon poor old Mexico these days, but there's an insurrection going on right in our midst.

What insurrection, you ask?

The revolt against misleading advertisements and underhanded storekeeping generally. This insurrection is growing in size every day and the insurgents are recruited from the ranks of the INTELLIGENT AND DEEP THINKING.

People have awakened to the fact that ALL advertising is not alike, and the buyer of today KNOWS which stores TELL the truth and which ones STRETCH the truth.

We have often said that we get better results from our advertisements than almost any store in the country, and we say it again with EMPHASIS. It isn't necessary for us to give a great deal of space in the paper to any one offering, and it isn't necessary for us to use the biggest and boldest type in the newspaper office to tell our story. You never see huge prices in our ads. that you see elsewhere, because we don't have to use BRASS BAND METHODS to attract our readers.

Whatever you see in a Bamberger ad, you may depend upon ABSOLUTELY. We value your good opinion of us too much to daily with the truth, even if we were so inclined.

Plainfield, N. J., March 17, 1911.

BOND SALE BY PUBLIC SERVICE

Through the consummation of negotiations that have been pending for some days the Public Service Corporation Wednesday sold to J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., of New York and Drexel & Co., of Philadelphia, $13,850,000 par value of its authorized issue of $50,000,000 of five per cent. general mortgage bonds.

It is understood that through this sale the corporation will be financed for the next two years, and it is intimated that after that time it will not be necessary for it to rely on bankers financial assistance. The proceeds of the sale will be used in paying off at maturity, or perhaps sooner, the issue of $4,000,000 collateral gold notes, which fall due October 1, 1913, and for the betterments planned by the corporation.

In other words, the bulk of the money realized on the sale of these bonds is to go into the corporation's properties for their permanent improvement. What the underwrting price on the issue was is not known. It was intimated by a representative of Drexel & Co., however, that the bonds will be put on the market at 94 and interest. The Fidelity Trust Company, of Newark, it is understood, will have the New Jersey territory in the sale of this issue as it did in the last one.

"I believe," said President Thomas N. McCarter, of the Public Service, yesterday, "that this transaction is the most beneficial and most far-reaching single event that has ever happened to Public Service."

That was also the view of local bankers and bond dealers when they learned of the sale. It was pointed out by them that through the money that it thus obtains the corporation will have no need in the next few years to worry about its finances or to think about the cash that will be necessary for betterments.

In 1912 the fixed charges of the corporation which have, in many instances been gradually increased on a sliding scale, will reach their maximum. They will then stand still. In the meantime and after that year the earnings will, in the natural order of things, increase, as they have in the time that the concern has been organized. With that fact in mind local bankers declared that there is little doubt that after 1913 the corporation will be in a position to do its own financing.

The bonds that were sold Wednesday bring the total outstanding amount of them up to $27,350,000. They were authorized September 27, 1909, and are secured by a mortgage on all the corporation's property of every character "now owned or hereafter to be acquired."

HIRAM'S SOLILOQUY

No, it don't seem much when yu count it,
But it's a lot it is very true,
When you look for a dime in your pocket,
And just find the hole it fell through.
Jus' save 'em up, for the rainy times,
An' yu'll find if they do come around,
That instead of measly little dimes,
Yu've got dollars, good and sound.

CLERGYMAN'S THOUGHT

Last year the drink bill of the British Isles decreased £6,000,000, nearly $30,000,000, owing largely to the popular demand for total abstinence and local option as the privilege of popular government. May we the people of beautiful Plainfield on this, St. Patrick's Day, follow the lead of such men that are determined "to destroy the works of the devil," than those who destroy and damn the souls of men.

COLONEL FOREMAN SAYS HE IS NOT A CANDIDATE.

Lieut Col. George M. Foreman has announced that he is not a candidate for Col. Nelson Y. Dungan's position in the National Guard of the State, giving as his reasons that he believes that the Second Regiment is a young man's regiment and should not be commanded by a man who had been in the national guard for forty-three years.

In view of this Brigadier General Collins, it is understood, will shortly call an election in the Second regiment for the post of colonel. Majors Martin, Reading and McCullough are leading candidates for the position.

Number 3
THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

7TH DAY BAPTISTS ENJOY ENTERTAINMENT

An informal entertainment was held at the Seventh-Day Baptist church, last night, under the auspices of the Woman's Society for Christian Work. The program opened with a violin solo by William Schultz, accompanied on the piano by Miss Mabel Maxson. There was also a vocal solo by Mrs. J. H. Randolph, accompanied on the violin by Mr. Schultz.

A feature was two pantomime tableaux entitled "Bo-Peep's Party," and "The Yarn of the Nancy Bell;" also a part song by Miss Celia Cottrell and John Cottrell, Jr., both appearing in costume.

After the entertainment refreshments appropriate to St. Patrick's Day were served by a committee, of which Mrs. L. T. Titsworth was chairman. Mrs. John Cottrell and Mrs. Asa F. Randolph were in charge of the entertainment and social, while Mrs. H. M. Maxson and Mrs. C. A. Rogers presided at an apron table.

HERE AND THERE.

The April number of a magazine published in New York, has an interesting article entitled "My Fifty Years in Puzzle Land," written by Walter Prichard Eaton which reports an interview with Sam Loyd, the famous puzzle maker and gives an account of the ten thousand puzzles that have emenated from Mr. Loyd's brain. Some of the most successful mentioned are the games, Parchesi, which is not a puzzle, Pigs in Clover, the Donkey puzzle and Teddy and the Lions. The interview describes Mr. Loyd as a sweet old fellow, sitting smiling at his desk, surrounded by an accumulated litter of generation touched by the hurry of modern business. The choice of his occupation has its reason in the answer he gave his interviewer who asked why he did not stick to civil engineering, for which he was trained. "If you could make ten thousand dollars in fifteen minutes with a puzzle, would you stick to engineering?" was Mr. Loyd's inquisitorial reply. Mr. Loyd claims in this article that many of the problems he has set for youthful readers are really genuine algebraic or geometrical problems dressed up in a guise to make them less abstract and so more interesting to the average boy or girl. Mr. Loyd says in conclusion that if he could consider himself an educator of American youth, he would be prouder of that distinction than of having been the inventor of Pigs in Clover, or having made a million of dollars—"if I had made a million of dollars." Mr. Loyd is a brother of Thomas Loyd and the Misses Loyd, of Washington avenue, his parents having lived in this city a numbers of years.

JAMES McARDLE DIES IN LODGING HOUSE.

Word was received by Chief of Police Kiely last evening that James McArdle, a former Plainfielder, had been found dead in a lodging house on East Twenty-third street, New York, yesterday afternoon. The body was taken to the morgue.

Before expiring McArdle said that he had an uncle in this city and gave the name as John Keeley, who, he said had the contract for street sprinkling here. Mr. Keeley said last night that the man worked for him for a time about five years ago, but that he was not a relative, in fact it is not believed that McArdle had any relatives in this city.

It was learned this morning that the dead man had at one time been in the employ of John Lynch, the hackman, as driver, but beyond that no further information could be obtained. The body will be buried in potters field unless claimed before Sunday.

To Stop Bonfires.

The police department has been requested to enforce the requirements of section four of the "Morals, Peace and Good Order" ordinance relating to the making of bonfires in the public streets. The immediate cause of this action was the dangerous litter left by some people on the streets after such fires.

Entertainment Postponed.

The social and entertainment which was announced to be held at the Park Avenue Baptist church, this evening, under the auspices of the Young People's Association, has been postponed on account of the death of Deacon Theodore I. Runyon.

Mrs. A. A. Cannon, of Somerset street, who has been detained at home the past two weeks by illness, is much improved.

ITEMS OF INTEREST TO 7TH-DAY BAPTISTS

"Denominational Missions in Europe," will be the topic of the prayer meeting at the Seventh-Day Baptist church this evening. Tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock, the pastor, Rev. Edwin Shaw, will speak on the subject, "Jesus, the Sender, or the Whole World for Christ." "Defeat Through Drunkenness," as illustrated by the Bible story will be the Sunday school lesson at 11:45.

The Christian Endeavor Society meeting will be unusual in that there will be no leader. The meetis expected to take care of itself, each person doing his or her part. The topic will be "The Dangers and the Uses of Money." Miss Mary Hunting will lead the Junior Christian Endeavor prayer meeting, the subject being "Israel, the Prince of God." Miss Vera Day, of Elizabeth, will address the young people at their prayer meeting upon the subject, "The Increase Campaign."

ACKERMAN'S STAMPS TO BE SHOWN PUBLIC

The Trenton Philatelic Society has secured the consent of Hon. Ernest R. Ackerman, president of the State Senate, to exhibit his collection of the stamps of British Guiana at Trenton on Tuesday night. This section of the Senator's collection is said to be one of the finest covering this country, and has never been exhibited before. For the exhibition, which will be held Tuesday evening, the society has secured the director's room of the Trenton Trust and Safe Deposit Company. Mr. Ackerman has consented to be present at the exhibition. Senator Ackerman is a collector of international fame, a fellow of the Royal Philatelic Society of London, England, and a member of the Trenton organization.

Tonight's Benefit.

It is expected that the Plainfield theatre will be filled to its capacity tonight, the event being the benefit performance for Mount St. Mary College. Only a few seats remain unsold. It was announced this morning that Edwin S. Hooley, who was among the first to subscribe for a box, had presented the box to the committee to be resold. The box was bought by David T. Kenney.

Mrs. R. P. Lincoln Entertains.

Mrs. Rufus P. Lincoln, of West Eighth street, gave a reception and tea at her home, this afternoon, for about sixty friends. There were many delightful features and the affair was more or less appropriate to St. Patrick's Day. During the afternoon, Mrs. Waldo Richards, of Boston, gave several recitations.

Ordered to Mexico.

Ensign Frederic VanAuken, who was recently married in this city to Miss Runyon, of East Sixth street, has been ordered to Mexico, and Mrs. VanAuken is on her way to her home here. Mr. and Mrs. VanAuken were located in Boston, where he was attached to one of the cruisers.

William H. Cruse.

William H. Cruse, colored, died last night at his home on South Second street. He was thirty-five years old and was a son-in-law of Rev. J. W. Mitchell. He leaves a wife and one child. The funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

ONE FOR NEWAKERS.

Elks Team Beaten in Bowling Match at Elizabeth.

Newark Elks got one game in three in an Elks' League bowling match that was rolled last night on the Elizabeth alleys. There was much good pinning on both sides. In the first contest the Union County Elks accounted for 1,006 and the Newarkers, with the good total of 904, were left far behind. Then came a total of 992 for Elizabeth, and Newark's mark of 913 was inadequate. There was a lack of high pinning in the last affair, but Newark with 813, took the affair by eight pins. Ohler led the Newarkers, with 211, Leick had 203 and Koch 202. For Elizabeth Nolte was on the job with 236, Clauss had 234, Gatham 227, Keller 213 and 200 and Van Bergen 204. The scores:

Nearly caught by a trap he set for chicken thieves, Charles H. Hallowell, of 421 Liberty street, Camden, had a narrow escape from being killed Wednesday. On the previous night he aranged a gun in such a position that when the door was opened it would be discharged. Hurrying to the chicken coop to get eggs for breakfast, he forgot about the trap, but fortunately the load of shot buried itself in the side of the hennery.

WHERE WILL YOU FIND THEIR EQUAL?

We don't hesitate to pronounce the suits we offer this season at $12 superior to any in the market; not only are these $12 suits made of excellent materials that are strictly all wool and embrace many handsome gray and brown mixtures, plain blue serges and attractive fancy striped serges, but they are tailored in a fashion that gives them a well-rounded-out appearance of the most carefully done custom work. The linings and trimmings are first-class, made to do service along with the outer materials—well balanced garments in every sense, fine enough for dress, cheap enough for business, and we ought to sell a lot of them this season—will sell a lot when men see them and appreciate the quality.

Men's Suits at $15

Just as good at the price as the $12 suits—we consider them higher value then any suit we know of retailed at $15.

Every one of these suits is made of strictly new Spring cloths, all wool, embracing gray and brown mixtures, plain and fancy serges, and are plainly tailored, handwork being put on them where most needed. The linings and trimmings are first-class and insure a suit that will give long, satisfactory service. The sizes run to 44.

N. Y. AMUSEMENTS.

"Marching Through Georgia," a new spectacle written and staged by Carroll Fleming, with scenic effects by Arthur Voegtlin and music arranged by Manuel Klein, was seen for the first time at the New York Hippodrome today. The new piece is in three scenes; the first showing The Lamar Plantation in Georgia, with the slaves busily engaged in picking cotton; scene second is the Road to the River; scene third shows a steamboat landing. "Marching Through Georgia" tells a Southern story of love in war time. It is not a war play and there is no shooting or firing on the stage. Lively times on the plantation are portrayed by several hundred extra jubilee singers and dancers. The military atmosphere is furnished chiefly by the march of Sherman's men to the sea. The piece de resistance in the matter of scenic effects is the construction of a Poontoon Bridge, which work is carried on in full sight of the audience.

Nearing its 250th performance in New York city, Geo. M. Cohan's delightful comedy "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," continues to be the potent magnet in attracting laugh loving crowds to the new Cohan theatre. Its success is evidenced in the applause and appreciation of amusement seekers as they view the unfolding of the story that is woven around J. Rufus Wallingford's promotion of shady financial deals. Hale Hamilton as "Wallingford;" Edward Ellis as "Blackie Daw," J. C. Marlowe as "Dempsey," Purnell Pratt as the reporter, Scamp Montgomery as the bus driver, Horace James as the mayor, Geo. K. Henry as the ex-judge, Frances Ring as the stenographer, Grace Goodale as the head waitress, Frederic Seaton, as the richest man in town, and Spencer Charters as the Pinkerton detective, succeed so definitely in typifying and visualizing the characters that the author has drawn as to make them real, every-day people with an earnest purpose in life far removed from play acting.

Dennis Denny, of Chicago, who has been visiting his brother, D. D. Denny, of Fairview avenue, has returned.

NUGENT ISSUES DEFI TO WILSON

Asserting that its enactment would "threaten the welfare of the people and the best interests of our party," the County Democratic Committee, Wednesday night, denounced the Geran election bill and its sponsor, Governor Wilson.

State Chairman James R. Nugent openly threw down the gauntlet to the Governor. He characterized the activities of Dr. Wilson, in behalf of the bill, as "bossism of the most reproachful type," and concluded his condemnation of the bill and the Governor in the following language:

"If the Governor chooses to invade Essex county, or any other county for that matter, and take the stump against those legislators who fail to conform to his viewpoint he will find us there in our own defense."

The committee voiced its opposition to the Geran measure, which Mr. Nugent averred was drawn by George L. Record, a "mountebank" by the unanimous adoption of a resolution. The resolution urged the adoption of House bill 433, which Mr. Nugent is credited with drafting, and which was introduced Monday by Mr. McGowan.

The McGowan bill, it is declared, adequately carries out the party's pledges for election reforms.

DAVENPORT TALKS TO WESTFIELD DINERS

Although it will b two weeks before the new fire house in Westfield is formally dedicated it had a decided introduction last evening when the Westfield Riding and Driving Club held its annual banquet in the fire laddies' new quarters. More than 200 were present.

The very striking decorations of the new hall caused much favorable comment, and the piquancy of the situation was added to by the headgear worn by the members. The little jockey caps were a hit. Harry Evans, president of the club, had his hands full, but they overflowed when Homer Davenport, the famous cartoonist, was presented. The din was deafening. Mr. Davenport was the lion of the evening and his exhibition of the real live Bedouin servant which is his bodyguard, caused the diners to gasp in astonishment.

"Love of Horses" semed to be the predominant feature of the speeches and old Dobbin came in for all the eulogy to which any member of the animal kingdom could possibly be entitled. Following the dinner a six-round bout with the gloves was staged and this entertainment was followed with several burlesque "meetings" between members of the club.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

When Jos. M. Gaites produced "Three Twins" theatrical managers were aghast. Such an enormous production and such a large and expensive company could never be made to pay, they said. But "Three Twins" has been seen by more people than any other musical play ever produced in America, and Mr. Gaites proved to the doubters that he knew what the theatregoers wanted. Then came "Bright Eyes," a second offering by the same authors and in it Mr. Gaites outdid himself. He gave the stage the largest, most elaborate and most extensive musical play ever produced. And again his judgment was proved correct. On Monday, March the 20th, "Bright Eyes" will arrive here on a special train of seven cars. Three of the cars on the train will be baggage cars required to carry the enormous scenic equipment of the play and the other four will be Pullmans necessary to carry the players and the musicians. The play will be given at the Plainfield theatre for one night only, Monday, March 20, with a company of ninety-five people, an orchestra of twenty-five musicians and the most elaborate scenic equipment ever seen with a musical play in Plainfield. The company that will be seen here is the same that was seen in the original New York production and the same that was seen in Chicago during the run there.

"The Spendthrift," which comes here next Tuesday night, is a play worth seeing, and one worth thinking about. It has a cogent lesson and paints a vital picture of the domestic tragedies which have made Reno a by-word and marriage a contract broken at convenience. It is a drama intense in situation and its whole is a vivid moral well blazoned by vigorous action, but its atmosphere is boiled down to a snappy, concise and clever form. The characters are splendidly drawn and the development of the plot, a wasted life caused by the extravagance of an unthinking wife, has been carried out in a vivid and true-to-life manner.

MRS. THERESA HERBERT SUCCUMBED THIS MORNING.

Mrs. Theresa Herbert, aged fifty years, died this morning at the home of W. J. Harper, 545 East Third street, where she had been living for the past eight months. Mrs. Herbert resided in Plainfield a number of years ago, and then removed to Brooklyn for a time, returning here less than a year ago.

Mrs. Herbert was a native of England, and so far as known she has no relatives living. The funeral will be held at the residence of W. J. Harper, 545 East Third street, tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. The burial will be in Hillside cemetery.

A Desperate Game

By JOHN K. LEYS,

Copyright, 1903, by John K. Leys.

"And what made you leave Lady Roscommon, my child?"

The girl hung her head and blushed, and the priest discreetly forbore to push the question.

"You saw a good deal of her ladyship, I suppose?" he asked.

"Yes, father; I was her own maid," said the girl, wondering a little.

"And her son, you would see something of him occasionally perhaps?"

"Sometimes," said Nora, blushing a little and wondering still more.

There was a long pause, and then Father Morris, diligently polishing his spectacles, said without looking up, "Did you ever hear your father's—I mean your stepfather's—death mentioned in that house?"

Nora started and changed color. She could not understand the object of these questions.

"Indeed I have, father," she answered in a low voice.

"Was anything said about—about who may have been guilty?"

There was a trace of anxiety in the priest's manner that Nora could not comprehend, and she scarcely knew how to answer him. She could not tell him all the pitiful story—the captain's love for her—her belief that he was guilty of the murder or at least the manslaughter of her stepfather—Lady Roscommon's solemn assurance that he was innocent—and the promise which she had foolishly bound herself by. She sat silent, therefore, and the priest repeated his question.

"Yes, I have heard it mentioned. I have mentioned it myself. At one time I believed that Captain Fitzgerald was guilty of having caused my father's death. Now I believe him to be innocent, but others may not be so ready to believe it."

The priest regarded her steadily as she said this, and then rose and paced the room in silence for a minute or two.

"I think you ought to know the truth," he said at last, stopping opposite to her.

"Do you know it?" she said in a voice scarcely above a whisper.

"I do. But it would be my duty to keep silence unless there was a danger of some one suffering a grave injury, which my speaking out might avert. As you say, you suspected Captain Fitzgerald, and others may do so too. At present you doubtless suspect his mother. I think it is safer that you, as the nearest relation of the deceased, should know all the facts of the case. Your stepfather, after he had confessed in the usual way, told me this: A few years ago he was living, as you know, on a farm in Ireland. His landlord was Sir Robert Butler, who lived, you may remember, not many miles from Lord Roscommon's place, Castle Dare. Sir Robert was a hard landlord, and his tenants hated him. He had been warned by the police that he ought not to ride out alone after dark.

"One night as your stepfather was coming home from market he came upon a dead body lying in the road. It was the body of Sir Robert Butler. He had been shot by some one, most likely by one of his tenants, a few minutes before. Your stepfather was greatly behind with his rent, so much so that application had been made for a decree of eviction, and when he saw his landlord's dead body lying in the road it struck him that perhaps Sir Robert had been to the town for the dreaded order of eviction and that it might at that moment be in his pocket.

"He took the dead man's pocketbook from his pocket, but as he was turning over the papers he was disturbed by the sound of horse's hoofs.

"Naturally afraid that if he were caught on the spot he might be suspected of having committed the crime, he did not wait to replace the pocketbook, but bolted with it in his hand and hid himself among the gorse and then made his way home.

"When he came to examine the pocketbook he found in it a very extraordinary paper. This was nothing less than a declaration made by Lady Roscommon, who was then dangerously ill and believed to be dying, that very afternoon before Sir Robert in his capacity as a magistrate.

"In this declaration she made, as I understood, a confession of something, I don't know what—something wrong that she had done. I believe she was afraid to die with the thing on her conscience, and I can't help thinking it likely that she had made Sir Robert, who was an old friend of hers, promise to burn her declaration if she got over her illness. The first thing she did when she was restored to health was to offer a large reward for the recovery of Sir Robert's pocketbook. She did not advertise under her own name. But your stepfather, knowing her secret, had no difficulty in guessing that the reward was offered by her. By that time he had been turned out of his farm by Sir Robert's heirs, and he saw an opportunity of making provision for himself for life by giving Lady Roscommon to understand that she must pay for his silence. The only excuse to be made for him is his poverty. At any rate that is what he did.

And now I come to the part of the story which more concerns us.

"On the night when he came by his death he met Lady Roscommon by appointment, as usual. She had over and over again wished him to take a sum of money and return to her the compromising paper, and at length he had consented to do so. He had taken it with him that night on purpose, but at the last moment he made some new condition which he thought necessary for his protection, for he had not got over his fear of being accused of having shot Sir Robert. This Lady Roscommon refused to grant, and as they were disputing they were joined by her ladyship's son, Captain Fitzgerald.

"He knew that she was in the habit of meeting a mysterious person, and, believing that some one was blackmailing her, he had resolved to probe the matter for himself and if possible set her free from that bondage. Not knowing what sort of man he was to meet, he had, not unnaturally perhaps, armed himself with a revolver which he kept in his room.

"When he arrived at the spot Molloy was using threatening language to his mother, and Captain Fitzgerald pointed his revolver at him and bade him begone if he valued his life.

"Molloy made threats and exasperated the lady to such a degree that she snatched the revolver out of her son's hand and, pointing it at your stepfather, ordered him to give up the paper instantly. Fitzgerald, seeing the danger there was in his mother's handling the weapon, tried to take it from her. There was a slight struggle between the two for possession of the revolver, and it unfortunately exploded, lodging the ball in your stepfather's body.

"The rest of the story you know. Captain Fitzgerald, generously taking the blame on himself, when he heard Lorimer coming ran away, choosing a course that would take him near enough to Lorimer to tempt the lawyer to pursue him and thus render it possible for his mother to get clear away. But she chose to remain where she was till Mr. Lorimer came back and found her there.

"You will now see why it was that your stepfather was so anxious that the police should not be informed of the affair, at least while he was alive. He was afraid that he would be punished for blackmailing and most likely be accused of shooting Sir Robert Butler, for he would have been forced to confess that he had rifled his pockets, and it was not to Lady Roscommon's interests or Captain Fitzgerald's that he should exculpate them publicly, for that would have caused inquiry to be made as to the origin of the whole business, and it was now Lady Roscommon's chief concern to keep her secret from her son and her husband."

Nora had been quietly crying during a good part of this recital, but now she dried her eyes and prepared to take her leave. Oh, if she had only known all this on the night of her stepfather's death what pain and misery she would have been spared!

Would she in that case have listened to Captain Fitzgerald when he first spoke to her of love? She could not tell. Perhaps her pride might have made her crush down the natural impulses of her heart and made her blind to all the advantages of the match. But now she loved Terence so well that she knew that only her own foolish promise to Lady Roscommon could stand in the way of her happiness if he were to ask her once more.

But would he do this? Was it possible that they should even meet again? She was forced to acknowledge to herself that it was most unlikely. In time he would forget her. But Nora knew well that it was impossible for her ever to forget.

She went back to London and in the afternoon called at a registry office for servants in the hope of getting a place, if not as lady's maid, then as housemaid or parlor maid.

A tall, slim lady was complaining to the proprietor about a servant she had been interviewing.

"I wonder that you should haf ze impertinence to recommend to me as maid zis yong person. She know not'ing of her duties—not'ing at all."

Nora with a suppressed scream started from the bench on which she was sitting. The indignant lady, who was dressed in a bewitching autumn costume, was Virginie!

Nora rose and followed Eva's former maid into the street. A hired brougham was standing opposite the door of the registry office, and Virginie made straight for it, but just as she opened the door Nora laid a firm hand on her arm.

The French woman uttered a faint scream and turned pale, but on seeing who it was that had touched her her look of alarm changed for one of indignation.

"Let me alone," she said, trying to get into the brougham.

"Not till you tell me what has become of Miss Fitzgerald! What have you done with her?"

"What have I done with her? You fool, why should I do anything with her? I left her—weeks ago. That's all."

"You must tell me all you know. I will not leave you till you do!" cried Nora, and with that she tightened her grasp on Virginie's arm.

"Let me go, or I will call a policeman!" cried Virginie.

BOILED BANKNOTES.

Caustic Soda Used to Destroy Worn Out French Currency.

Everybody knows that wornout banknotes in this country are destroyed by maceration at the treasury department, but the manner in which the notes of the Bank of France are destroyed is probably not so well known.

At the head office of the Bank of France there is a permanent tribunal before which all doubtful paper is brought. The tribunal writes "anule" on the faces of the banknotes. The judgment is countersigned by the treasurer, and they are taken to the cellars in which the printing office is situated. In the presence of the bank's official they are brought out for annihilation. Distributed one by one into baskets, the condemned notes are emptied into a great cylinder half filled with water and caustic soda.

The orifice of the cylinder is then locked and set in motion. It turns for two days, at the end of which time the officials who presided at the beginning of the operation return to witness the end of the notes.

Furnished with a long spoon, a workman thrusts into the depths of the cylinder and withdraws a thick, steaming liquid, which he pours into a thin basin. Another workman approaches with a similar spoon, with which he stirs the stuff around to make sure not a remnant has been left of the notes. When the banknote soup has been reduced to paste it is sold for $1 a hundred kilos, about 200 pounds, although the paper at one time cost $5 for two pounds.—Washington Herald.

KIND CAPTAIN KIDD.

His Wickedness and Buried Treasure Both Said to Be Myths.

Doomed to an infamy undeserved, his name reddened with crimes he never committed and made wildly romantic by tales of treasure which he did not bury, Captain William Kidd is fairly entitled to the sympathy of posterity and the apologies of all the ballad makers and alleged historians who have obscured the facts in a cloud of fable.

Fate has played the strangest tricks with the memory of this seventeenth century seafarer, who never cut a throat nor made a victim walk the plank, who was no more than an amateur pirate in an era when this interesting profession was in its heyday and who was hanged at Execution dock for the excessively unromantic crime of cracking the skull of his gunner with a wooden bucket because, forsooth, his majesty's officers were unable to prove their charges of piracy.

As for the riches of Captain Kidd, the original documents in his case, preserved among the state papers of the public record office in London, relate with much detail what booty he had and what he did with it. Alas, they reveal the futurity of the searches after the stout sea chest buried above high water mark. The only authentic Kidd treasure was dug up and inventoried more than 200 years ago, nor has the slightest clew to any other been found since then.—"Romances of Buried Treasure" in Metropolitan Magazine.

The Snail and the Screw.

It is no doubt true that nearly all human inventions have been suggested by natural objects. M. Charles Fremont of the French School of Mines points out an interesting example in the case of the screw, the fundamental idea of which, he believes, was suggested to primitive man by the spiral shell of the edible snail. It was not the shape of the shell that suggested the screw, but the spiral motion which it is necessary to give to the body of the snail in order to withdraw it from the shell. This at once showed that an object of a screw shape embedded in a solid powerfully resisted attempts to withdraw it by a straight pull. The hint was enough, and the screw became one of the earliest of man's inventions.—Youth's Companion.

Real Accommodating.

Olga, Swedish maid of all work, had curiously defined ideas regarding property rights, although she had no intention of being at all dishonest. On one occasion when it was Olga's afternoon out her mistress said to her when she was about to depart from the house:

"Olga, I can't find those handsome silk stockings of mine. Have you seen them?"

"Yes, ma'am, I have them on. I know you stay home today and do not need them. You can have a pair of mine to wear yoost around home if you haf none."—Minneapolis Journal.

He Wanted the Job.

To the colored man who made application for work he listened and awaited the finish of the tale of the applicant's qualifications for the job, then stalled in this manner: "Well, I'd like to give you the place, but I'm afraid I can't for you tell me you are married. I have special reasons for wanting to give this position to a single man." "Why, boss," exclaimed the willing worker, "if dat's de on'y trouble, Ah kin git a divohce between now an' when you all's ready foh me to start in."—Argonaut.

An Insulting Addition.

An irate citizen started for the office of his local newspaper for the purpose of clubbing the editor. One of his friends asked him what the editor had done to him, and he said:

"I sent him a letter signed 'Honestas' and he printed it, but added another 's.'"—Minneapolis Journal.

We WANT COMPETITION

of the Right Sort, Not the Following Kind!

A Mrs. S—— after selecting her outfit and learning the total cost from our plainly marked price tags, said she preferred to make comparisons elsewhere before ordering, to which we readily agreed, for it's a thing we always URGE!

On getting another store's prices (where they were marked in private signs) she found ours were far less, and SAID so. The salesman promptly dropped to our figures—AND GOT THE ORDER.

Here, where there's but ONE PLAINLY MARKED PRICE ON EVERY ITEM, such an "accommodating" and sudden price drop would be impossible—here, when you read the price tag, you KNOW it's already at lowest point, for ALL prices are made and REMAIN on the SAME UNIFORMLY SMALL PROFIT BASIS. We don't HAVE to run a "leader" here and there for an hour, or a day, to catch trade, as ALL lines are equally good values EVERY day in the year!

All we want is HONEST competition that meet OUR plainly marked prices WITH prices you can READ!

MISSIONS' JUBILEE

Preparatory Meetings to be Held Here for Big Gathering in Gotham.

FOR EVANGELICAL CHURCHES.

Meeting to Be Held Here on Friday, March 24 and the Demonstration in New York, March 27 to 30.

A notable series of meeting will be held in New York city March 27 to 30, under the auspices of the Women's National Jubilee Committee for Foreign Missions. Its object is to inform the women of this land of their duty and privilege in elevating oriental women to the position only to be conferred upon them through Christian civilization.

Preparatory Jubilee meetings have already been held in many places. One has been planned by a committee of women from the churches of Plainfield, to be held in Trinity Reformed church, afternoon and evening of Friday, March 24, at 3 and 8 o'clock. The afternon meeting will be especially for women, and addresses will be made by Mrs. Helen M. Montgomery, president Long Island Women's Missionary Association, who will speak on "Fifty Years of Women's Work in Foreign Missions," and by Dr. Mary Carleton, of China. At 8 p. m., there will be a meeting for both men and women. The speakers will be Rev. Dr. Lewis R. Scudder, of India, and Miss Seuman, of the Philippines.

Invitations have been sent to the women of all evangelical churches of Dunellen, Bound Brook, Somerville, Scotch Plains and Westfield, to attend these meetings. Visitors wishing to attend both meetings will be entertained between the meetings in the home of the women of the Plainfield churches, if they will kindly send their names to the chairman of the entertainment committee; Mrs. St. John Fitch, 916 Park avenue, Plainfield.

The following extracts are from a leaflet by Mrs. J. H. Knowles, explanatory of the origin, aims and results so far of the Jubilee Movement.

"It is a wonderful story. From the far Judan hills we hear in it the echo of the Master's voice, 'O woman, great is thy faith—be it unto thee as thou wilt.'

In 1860 the Woman's Union Missionary Society was organized including all denominations. Hence this year of our Lord 1910 is the jubilee year for all women's foreign missionary societies.

Following the ecumenical conference of missions held in Carnegie Hall, N. Y., in 1900, came the central committee on united study an advance movement that has done more, perhaps, to create intelligent interest in foreign missions than any other human agency. It is from this central committee of which Mrs. Henry W. Peabody is chairman, that the call came early in the summer to the women of all the churches from the Atalntic to the Pacific to unite in a jubilee of meetings, beginning October, 1910, closing at flood tide in New York, in March, 1911.

The success of this Jubilee proves that we can work together, Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists and Congregationalists, every creed forgetting its differences and massing forces at the call of Jesus Christ to meet the need of his world.

We must work together to prove our essential unity in Christ to show to the uninterested women the power of our cause, which is greater than creed, and to lift up all together beaten and bruised womanhood and childhood of non-christian lands. And this is the story of the triumphant march from sea to sea to the music of the herald angel, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."

The first meeting in Oakland, Cal., placed the seal of success upon the enterprise. In San Francisco there and Portland there were crowded houses, high enthusiasm, and generous pledges of money. In Seattle, the spiritual impression dominated all and Denver, Omaha, Kansas City, and St. Louis responded beyond all expectations. The November itinerary included St. Paul, Milwaukee, Cincinnati and Chicago.

The offerings thus far reported amount to more than $400,000 divided among the various boards according to the wish of the donors. The expectation is one million dollars before this glorious campaign ends, although the money is second to the spiritual influence in the purpose of the jubilee.

Herewith, then, comes the call. Awake, Daughter of Zion, shake thyself from the dust of too many social engagements, too many unnecessary self-imposed duties, and secure your part in the coming festival.

Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, in the "Helping Hand," gives these

COLUMBUS LODGE ENTERTAINS FRIENDS

Columbia lodge, No. 58, A. O. U. W., gave a "ladies' night" entertainment in its rooms in Exempt Firemen's Hall last night. It was largely attended by members and their families.

The program was in charge of Past Grand Master Workman V. W. Nash and comprised the following numbers; Sleight-of-hand exhibition, Professor Irwin; vocal selection, "I Can't Miss That Ball Game," John V. Todd; piano selection and songs, John J. Campbell; pianologue, William H. Pope; songs, little Miss Keily, of New Market. There were also addresses by Grand Master Workman John Klopper, of Camden; Past Grand Master Workman Frank Tussy, of Camden, and members of the lodge.

A number not originally on the program was the presentation of a handsome gold past master workman's jewel to Joseph F. Sheppard, whose term recently expired. The gift was made by the lodge in appreciation of his faithful and helpful services and came as a great surprise. Past Grand Master Tussy made the presentation address in a facetious vein and Mr. Sheppard responded fittingly. The jewel is a handsome cross-bar and pendant affair, bearing a suitable inscription.

The entertainment was arranged and in charge of a committee composed of V. W. Nash, chairman; J. F. W. Bauersachs, Peter Doeringer, A. C. Nash and Frank Legge.

ATTRACTIONS BOOKED FOR THE COMING WEEK

The popluar expression that "good things come only in small packages" has been given a knock-out blow by Manager H. S. Sanderson, of the Plainfield theatre. He has a large bundle of "good things" theatrically speaking, that he will present during the coming week. His announcement for this period is undoubtedly one of the best of the season.

Beginning with this afternoon and evening, Mr. Sanderson will present the pronounced musical comedy success, "The Time, the Place and the Girl." It has made an emphatic hit wherever seen and Plainfield amusement seekers are sure to enjoy it. It comes here with a selected cast and chorus and an augmented orchestra.

On Monday night next comes the popular play house price derisistance for the week, Joseph M. Gaites' splendid production of "Bright Eyes." It is being presented by one of the largest companies on the road this year, numbering sixty five people without orchestra or accompanying stage crew. The piece is by the same author who gave the public the delightful "Three Twins" and received the unanimous approval of the critics when it opened a long run at the New York theatre. The musical numbers are the catchy, whistling kind, the dances new and original and the scenic mounting in keeping with the Gaites' successes. "Bright Eyes" was secured by the local management after considerable negotiation and will in all probability draw a crowded house.

The attraction following "Bright Eyes" is the absorbing drama "The Spendthrift." It is from the pen of Porter Emerson Brown, who gave the American stage Robert Hilliard's successful vehicle "A Fool There was," now in its second year. "The Spendthrift" is produced by Manager Fred Thompson, of the Hippodrome and Luna Park, a guarantee in itself of the merit of the piece. The principal role is entrusted to Edmund Bruse, the original "John Burkett Ryder," of "The Lion and the Mouse." He has the support of that clever little and charming actress Thais Magraine, and a cast of corresponding merit.

The week will close with a matinee and night performance next Saturday of Eugene Walter's great play, "The Wolf" This production is regarded as one of the present-day stand dramas and is neven more popular now than when first presented. Popular prices will prevail for the engagement.

The remainder of the month and for part of April will bring many more high class offerings to the theatre, giving amusement lovers a wide variety to select from.

TO MAKE BOY OBEY

Clergyman Tells How to Tempt Youths to Respect Commands.

PROBLEM FOR THE PARENT.

Rev. Franklin K. Mathiews Gives Some Sound Advice in Third of Series of His Lectures.

Another large audience of mothers heard Rev. Franklin K. Mathiews yesterday afternoon in Y. M. C. A. hall deliver the third of a series of five talks on "Obedience." His topic was "Tempting the Boy to be Good, or the Art of Making Commands Attractive." Mr. Mathiews said in part:

"We want our children to please us; we are not so anxious to please them. It is very important, however, that we should know how better to please our boys. The boy should be studied with this object. Just as the merchant studies to present his goods to the customer in the most pleasing way, so should the mother be concerned to present ethical precept and moral and religious truth to the boy in an attractive manner. One way to do this is by making commands attractive.

"There is great danger that what we command our children to do will hold a truth so vital to the child's life that the mother will feel that she has the right to be insistent, to compel obedience. This is the position of the old pedagogue, despised and rejected of children. The wise mother will realize that the truth embodied in a command should not be forced upon the unwilling and unreceptive boy but that his interest in that truth should be first aroused. Interest makes the child receptive. It is to the child's mind what soup is to the course-dinner, making the mind ready for truth, just as soup prepares the digestive system for the dinner to follow.

"Why do children so often forget? Because, in giving the command which has been forgotten, the child's interest was not provoked. There was no appeal to the child's will and interest is the soul of the will. The boy's will is only as strong as his interest is strong.

"There are two psychological laws which apply to the problem of making commands attractive:

"First, commands must be made attractive.

"Second, in order to interest mind, we must know temperament.

"Now there are three elemental types of temperament, the motor type, the sensory type and the adolescent type. The body of the motor type is the excessively active boy. With him, there is no impression without corresponding expression. He is made for action. One of the ways in which his excessive activity expresses itself is by a willingness to get up in the morning. He reads when very young, read alond and reads for quantity, he asks questions, he is demonstratively affectionate. The boy of the motor type is apparently the more willing.

"The sensory-minded child has an obstructed will. To the impression flowing in from without, the mind is as a sponge, absorbing it. This type of child is passive. It is hard for him to get up in the morning, he is timid, he is not demonstrative, he is frequently regarded as stubborn.

"These two types require distinct methods of treatment. In the case of the motor-minded boy, his interest should be provoked along the line of athletics, and sport. Perhaps he is careless about combing his hair. As he is interested in baseball, cause him to note from pictures with what care some of his baseball heroes comb their hair. He is interested in the development of a strong body. Make the manual labor requirement of him about the house a pleasure by showing him how he is thereby getting up his muscle. The art of making commands attractive to the boy of this type consists in just such seeming trifles.

"It is different with the boy of the sensory type. The mother must study thoroughly to know what his interests are. With this type of child there is a place for rewards and prizes, for stimuli to action along desired lines. This whole matter of the use of prizes and rewards will be considered later in a separate lecture.

"The third type of boy is the adolescent type. Here we are dealing with the child of both the motor and sensory types as he is passing through the adolescent period, the period of revolution in the child's development. The classical illustration of this type is the child Jesus in the temple, disobedient for the first time, throwing off the restraint of parental authority, conscious of his power to reason. At this time, that is from the age of twelve on, the child begins to rationalize his

MRS. M'KELVEY HEAD OF WARREN SOCIETY

Reports and election of officers comprised the chief business at the annual meeting of the Missionary and Aid Society of the Warren chapel yesterday afternoon. There were about 100 women present, including delegations from the Crescent Avenue church and Hope chapel. A feature was the address by Miss Eleanor Demarest, formerly of this city, but now of Philadelphia, where she is employed in work among the Italians under the auspices of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions. Miss Demarest held the close attention of the large audience as she related many incidents in connection with her labors among Italians.

Mrs. A. V. D. Honeyman, who was president of the society for thirteen years, was in the chair and delivered the welcome. Mrs William Demarest, chairman of the nominating committee, presented the following list of names and they were unanimously elected: President, Mrs. Joseph O. McKelvey; first vice-president, Mrs. Joseph W. Gavett; second vice-president, Mrs. Martha VanWert; treasurer Mrs John Green; secretary, Mrs. Gibson Smith; secretary of literature, Mrs. John Schenck.

Mrs. Honeyman gave Mrs. McKelvey a hearty welcome as president, in retiring from the chair. Mrs. Gibson Smith, secretary, presented her report telling of the work of the past year and stating that the society has an active membership of about fifty-five, together with honorary and active members.

The report of the treasurer, Mrs. John Green showed that $170 was raised the past year, $71 for foreign missions, $76 for home missions, $15 for ministerial relief and $21 for Freedmen's work, and in addition about $320 to reduce the mortgage fund of the chapel. The C. E. Society raised $200 and $180 was secured through a special fund, making a total of $700 for the fund. The society has also performed much box work. Mrs. Benjamin Moore reported for the visiting committee and Mrs. Joseph McKelvey for the entertainment committee. After the business the women adjourned to the parlors where refreshments were served under the direction of Mrs. John Higgins and her assistants.

There were a great many beautiful floral tributes, comprising wreaths and cut flowers from the church, the Sunday-school, Mr. Runyon's adult Bible class, the board of deacons and the insurance company with which he was connected for forty years, as well as many other relatives and friends.

GET-TOGETHER CLUB HOLDS ANNUAL FEAST

There was a large gathering at the annual St. Patrick's day banquet of the Get-Together Club last night at the Hotel Waldorf. Judge William N. Runyon acted as toastmaster. Between courses George O. Stevens, George Luhr and Judge Runyon entertained the guests with songs. Mr. Luhr rendered "Where the River Shannon Flows,' while Mr. Stevens sang "My Manda Lee." Judge Runyon sang "The Preacher and the Bear," a negro melody. All three singers were loudly applauded.

It was the unanimous opinion that the banquet was one of the best ever served by Henry Windham and he given a round of cheers before the dinner ended. George J. Tobia, Alexander Ayers and Andrew McCardell, the committee, also came in for marks of appreciation for the fine arrangements and the success of the affair. Speeches were made by Assemblyman T. M. Donnelly, William Newcorn, Joseph Harrigan, James F. Buckle, Thomas Hanna and others.

COLLEGE BENEFIT A BIG SUCCESS

At Least $1,000 Netted for Sisters of Mercy Whose Building Was Destroyed by Fire.

ARTISTS ROUNDLY APPLAUDED.

Maggie Cline; Charles J. Ross; Tim McMahon; Hill and Sulvani and Others Please Big Audience.

When the curtain was raised for the first number on the program at The Plainfield theatre last evening, the big auditorium was filled and many standees had to be contented with observing the performance from a position back of the orchestra. The boxes were filled and the audience was one of the most appreciative that the theatre has held in many a day.

Of the performance itself there can nothing but praise be said.. To use the expression of one of the audience "It was the best mixed entertainment I ever attended." Roberts, Hayes and Roberts opened the fun with their playlet, "The Cowboy, the Lady and the Swell," and from then on until the last number by Mlle. Bruguiere was rendered there was a continuous round of applause. Mlle Bruguiere whose selections were of the highest order, sang with beautiful technique and wonderful expression bringing to her audience moments of undeniable pleasure.

When Maggie Cline, the "Irish Queen" came on the stage she was greeted with an old time reception from many who remembered her best when "T'row Him Down, McClusky," was the song of the hour. Miss Cline sang with her usual vigor and won deserved applause. Charles Ross's monologue set the house roaring and the Sylvester trio did wonders in the entertaining line.

After the performance, Harry Sanderson, manager of the theatre, said that the whole performance if paid for at the usual rate for this class of artists could not have been given for any less than $2,500. There was not a dissatisfied person in the audience nor was there a single item of the bill offered that could be excepted to. McMahon & Chapelle in "Why Hubby Missed the Train," were simply immense. It must not be forgotten that the success of the entertainment was largely due to Mr. McMahon through whom the artists of the evening were obtained. Messrs. P. H. Burns and David T. Kenney, of the committee were unable this morning to state with accuracy the net financial result of the entertainment, but it is sure to be large.

The program: part one, Farley & Clare, dancers, Caulfield & Driver, "The Section Boss;" comedy success Charles Ross, monologue; Miss Mathilde L. Bruguiere, accompanied by Miss Elizabeth Hirt, 1. (a) Jewel Song from Faust, Gounod; (b) Habanera (Carmen), Bizet; (c) Erlkonnig, F. Schubert; (d) Dich Theure Halle (Tannhauser), Wagner; 2. (a) Killarney, (b) Kathleen Mavourneen, (c) When Love is Kind. Part two, Sylvester Trio, featuring Larry, Jr., specialty act; Roberts, Hayes & Roberts, The Cowboy, the Lady and the Swell; McMahon & Chappelle, "Why Hubby Missed the Train," comedy sketch; Maggie Cline, The Irish Queen; Firenze Trio, operatic Singers; Hill & Silvany, sensational bicyclists. The Hallet & Davis piano was furnished free.

A check for $1,000 was today handed over to the treasurer of Mt. St. Mary College by Mrs. David T. Kenney, who is treasurer of the committee having last night's performance in charge. P. H. Burns, secretary of the committee said this morning that the whole affair was a success and that he wished to thank all those who had contributed in any way to the entertainment. No little amount of the credit for the event is due to Mr. Burns himself and the other members of the committee wish this sentiment expressed through The Daily Press.

The committee desire to thank the ushers of the Plainfield theatre for their efficient services. They are Elmer Hoffman, Peter Roseberry, George Coe, Jr., Harry Hoffman, Arthur Fluck, A. H. Cooke and the headusher, George Ballantyne.

WORK THAT TELLS.

Plenty of It Has Been Done Right Here in Plainfield.

Cures that last are cures that tell. To thoroughly know the virtues of a medicine you must investigate the cures and see if they prove permanent. Doan's Kidney Pills stand this test, and plenty of proof exists right here in Plainfield. People who testified years ago to relief from backache, kidney and urinary disorers, now declare that relief was permanent and the cure prefect. How can any Plainfield sufferer longer doubt the evidence?

Mrs. S. Driscoll, 1009 South Second street, Plainfield, N. J., says. "There was a dull pain across the small of my back and in my sides that clung to me constantly and any hard work made my condition worse. I was subject to headaches and dizzy spells, especially when stooping and I felt weak and run down. I tried plasters and various remedies, but nothing helped me until I procured a supply of Doan's Kidney Pills at Randolph's Drug Store. They did such good work in correcting my trouble that I heartily recommend them." (Statement given August 25, 1908).

RE-ENDORSEMENT.

Mrs. Driscoll was interviewed on January 29, 1911, and she added to the above: "I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills just as highly today as I have been for the past five years. They made a lasting cure in my case."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

SPORTS

News and Notes

CY YOUNG DECIDES TO QUIT NATIONAL GAME

Cyrus Denton Young, better known as "Cy," the veteran baseball pitcher, Wednesday announced his retirement from baseball. The twirler decided upon this course at Hot Springs, Ark. Young has been there with many other prominent ball players for several weeks endeavoring to reduce his weight and get into playing condition, but he found the task too severe, and, becoming discouraged over the outlook, decided to announce his passing from the sport.

Young is forty-five years old, and has played in the big leagues sinces 1890, when he made his debut with the Cleveland club. It seems appropriate now that again as a member of the Cleveland team he should announce his retirement. "Cy" won more than 500 games during his twenty years in the major leagues and lost only about 300 contests. His greatest successes were attained as a member of the Boston Americans after he left St. Louis in 1900.

He played with Cleveland until 1899, was with St. Louis two years and went to Boston in 1900, when the American League placed a club in that city. He helped Boston to win the American League and world's championships, and was a most successful pitcher until 1909, when he was disposed of to the Cleveland club. His baseball star was then setting, and in 1909 he won only nineteen games and lost fifteen, although his support was not such as he received from the Boston club.

Last year the few games that he won gave him the distinction of having won 500 games since his advent into the major leagues. Young has amassed a small fortune from baseball, he having a farm in Ohio and much other property, and when he returns home from Hot Springs he will look after his agricultural interests.

GOLF.

A sepcial meeting of the Plainfield Country Club will be held on Thursday evening, March 23, at the Hartridge auditorium, to authorize a moderate increase in the dues of members so as to provide about $2,000 additional income. The idea is to have a little more income than needed for operating expenses, so as to make improvements from year to year, without increasing the bonded debt. Both the men's locker room and the ladies' dressing room must be enlarged at once; and another year the water plant will have to be increased in capacity.

In a year or two something will have to be done to enrich the turf on the fair green of the golf course, or there will be no grass left. The club has never had an income sufficient to spend what is necessary each year to improve the turf; but the time is now at hand when top-dressing and copious seeding must be undertaken, or the soil will have been worn bare. A gasoline roller and grass cutter should be added to the equipment another year. The course can never be rolled smooth with a horse-roller, because it can be rolled to advantage only when the frost is just out of the ground; and horses cannot be used when the ground is soft. It does hardly any good to roll when the ground is firm. The gasolene roller and cutter is now in general use. It costs $1,300, and does the work of three horse machines.

It is impossible to keep up good operating service in the several departments and at the same time make improvements, without a slightly larger income. New tennis courts are needed, a larger front piazza, and a club stage line to connect with the trolley. With this additional income, some progress can be made on these needed improvements.

The President, in his annual report, recommended a moderate increase of dues, but he stated distinctly that it was for the club to decide, whether there should be additional income for improvements. The special meeting next week has not been called by the officers or trustees. The club members themselves at the annual meeting last month, approved of the president's recommendations, and voted that the dues should be increased. A large and representative committee of club members have held a meeting and formulated a plan which will be voted on next Thursday.

They point out especially that while different members may hold different views as to the best way of increasing the dues, the main thing is to propose a workable plan which may reasonably be expected to produce the necessary revenue in the fairest way. It is hoped that members who are not opposed to a moderate increase, will recognize the difficulty of formulating any plan which would suit everyone, and will support the committee of club members who, while not in entire agreement themselves as to details, have unanimously voted to support the plan which was most acceptable to most of them.

The average dues at clubs of the same character are fifty dollars for active members, and about twenty dollars for associates. Clubs maintaining squash, billiard rooms and hotel features have even higher dues. The Plainfield club is the only one in existence, so far as known, with a junior class at only $6 a year.

of the Right Sort, Not the Following Kind!

A Mrs. S—— after selecting her outfit and learning the total cost from our plainly marked price tags, said she preferred to make comparisons elsewhere before ordering, to which we readily agreed, for it's a thing we always URGE!

On getting another store's prices (where they were marked in private signs) she found ours were far less, and SAID so. The salesman promptly dropped to our figures—AND GOT THE ORDER.

Here, where there's but ONE PLAINLY MARKED PRICE ON EVERY ITEM, such an "accommodating" and sudden price drop would be impossible—here, when you read the price tag, you KNOW it's already at lowest point, for ALL prices are made and REMAIN on the SAME UNIFORMLY SMALL PROFIT BASIS. We don't HAVE to run a "leader" here and there for an hour, or a day, to catch trade, as ALL lines are equally good values EVERY day in the year!

All we want is HONEST competition that meet OUR plainly marked prices WITH prices you can READ!

ISN'T THAT FAIR?

EASY CREDIT 6 months, 1 year, or 1½ year's time to pay—or 10 per cent off for cash.

IRON WILL LAST ONLY THIRTY YEARS

Speaking on the subject of conservation of iron, Dr. Allerton S. Cushman, director of the bureau of industrial researches at Washington, declared at the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, last night, that at the present rate of production the iron supply of the United States will be exhausted in thirty years. Not only is the production threatened, according to Dr. Cushman, but the iron and steel now in use is rapidly deteriorating under the influence of corrosion or rust, and it is absolutely essential, he declared, that some means of protection be found to assure to the world the use of iron in the future.

From five million tons in 1870, Dr. Cushman stated that the production of iron in the United States had increased to fifty-five million tons in 1910. The per capita production of pig iron in the United States has increased more than a thousand per cent, since 1850, according to the scientists

"If the average rate of increase by decades should be continued," he said,, "it would require the production of the next three decades of 6,088,000,000 tons of ore. But the ore supply now available in the United States is estimated at 4,788,000,000 tons, which is only seventy-eight per cent of the amount needed on this assumption. It is evident, therefore, that the present average rate of increase in production of high grade ores cannot continue even for the next thirty years."

Striking Expressmen Return.

Owing to a split in the striking expressmen in New York, more than 2,000 United States Express Company drivers returned to work today. A vote was taken by the men and the advice of some of their leaders that they remain out was repudiated. It is also reported that the Wells-Fargo employes would meet today and would probably return to work promptly.

St. Patrick's Day Social.

Sunday school class No. 30, of Trinity Reformed church, of which Horace J. Martin is the teacher, held a St. Patrick's Day social at the residence of Mrs. Howard Allegar, on Elm street, last night. There were about forty guests and the evening was spent in playing games and having a social time. Refreshments were served later in the evening.

Will Sing at Trinity.

later reports of the Eastern Jubilee.

Any fear that the jubilee tide would ebb with the close of the Western circuit have proved groundless. In Washington, the capital city, preparations have been made for many weeks that left nothing to be desired. The final meeting was held in the beautiful Colonial Hall of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The gifts reported amounted to more than $20,000; but they are only the beginning of what Washington is planning to do.

From Washington the Jubilee swept on to Richmond, where the keynote of preparation had been prayer. For two weeks women of every church had assembled to pray God's blessing on the Jubilee. The same enthusiasm marked the Baltimore meeting, extensive preparations, churches filled and overflow meetings was the gathering of twelve hundred children to hear missionary stories.

Shall not these stirring reports from other cities rouse us women of Plainfield and nearby cities to enthusiasm and enable us to make our own jubilee meeting a means of renewed inspiration to missionary enterprise?

"And let it be when thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt bestoir thyself: for then shall the Lord go out before thee." 2 Sam. 5—24.

Mrs. Blink—The people in the next suite to ours are awfully annoying. They pound on the wall every time Mamie sings. I wish we knew of some way to drive them out of the flat.

"Why not have Mamie keep on singing?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Number 3

THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

past. Practically, up to 12, children do not think. Now the boy goes back, examines his past, the commands, precepts, everything given to him by his parents, all in the light of reason. He may repudiate it all. In order that he rather approve of it, the parent must do the work of the years eight to twelve well. This period preceding adolescence is the habit-forming, conscience-building period, the period when the whole life, expressing itself in play, is getting ready for the later period of strain and stress. It is for the parent to fix habit and make conscience imperative and dictatorial during this earlier period.

"That commands may be made attractive to the adolescent boy, the parent must recognize that the child has now a mind. Commands may well take the form 'Don't you think you ought to do this?' 'What do you think about it?' The child should be led all the time to believe it is having its own way. Its liberty, however, is within the limits set by the parent.

"There are some commands that cannot be made attractive. There are some duties for the child that will surely be disagreeable, things that simply must be done no matter whether the child wants to do them or not. But if the parent's attitude has been to be pleasing to the child, it will be much easier to get him to do the hard thing.

"Are we always courteous with the child? Too often, when he is interested in his play or his occupation, we rudely break in upon him without reason. There is a cry in every child's heart—the cry to be understood, to be treated with the courtesy and consideration due to a growing personality. Let us be courteous with our children."

come together and contributed articles of domestic use toward the new college. Among them are the leading dry goods, house-furnishing and stationery stores. The Sisters of Mercy appreciate the many tokens of friendship which they have received and they express the hope that all those who have in any way helped in the good work will fully understand their appreciation. It is impossible to enumerate all who have extended material sympathy nor is it possible to thank personally the well wishers of the college, but it is certain that every least item is warmly remembered by the sisters.

STATE NEWS BRIEFS

Judge Starr Thursday fixed April 17 as the date for the retrial of the Davis-Price license case in the Gloucester County Court.

Jarvis R. Davis, a prominent Trenton citizen, was found dead in bed at his home Thursday. Death was caused by apoplexy.

The Gloucester County Freeholders Thursday awarded the contract for rebuilding the bridge at Mt. Royal to the Owego Bridge Company for $2,590, the lowest of three bidders.

Surgeon Charles MacDonald, of Fort Mott, has received notification from the medical headquarters of the United States army at Washington, D. C., that the hospital at Fort Mott may be thrown open to the use of civilians in Salem county.

George W. Holdcraft, of near Sewell, lost his barns and horses by fire late in January. His neighbors turned out a few days ago and hauled lumber and cement blocks for a new structure, which is rapidly going up.

Miss Emma Champion, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William G. Champion, and who is a student at the State Normal School at Trenton, entertained the senior class at a St. Patrick's party at her home in Millville Thursday night.

Struck by a train at West Palmyra Wednesday evening, Mrs. Louisa Broker died Thursday at Cooper Hospital, Camden. Internal shock was the cause of death. Mrs. Broker was sixty-four years old and resided at 320 West Broad street, West Palmyra.

A sea gull flew through an open window into Bayonne police headquarters Thursday. It made several circles about the head of Sergenat M. F. Reilly, and then took refuge on top of a telephone booth. After resting itself the bird gave a series of squawks and departed as it had come.

A West Jersey and Seashore Railroad electric train struck a furniture wagon belonging to Harry Shaw, of Bridgeton, at the South Glassboro crossing Thursday. Joseph Ludlam, the driver, who was in the bottom of the wagon to escape the wind, was thrown twenty feet, picked up unconscious and taken to a hospital. The wagon was demolished, but the horses escaped.

James McKilip, a prominent farmer of Mannington Township, Salem county, was cutting corn stalks on a fodder cutter, when the glove on his left hand caught in some piece of the machinery. Before the power could be shut off the hand was drawn into the machinery and portions of his fingers, hand and arm were cut off in exactly the same manner as the stalks are cut.

In placing "Jack" Ronan, a boxer, under bail charged with stealing a horse and carriage belonging to Jacob Raff, of Riverside, Justice of the Peace Ziegler said he considered a horse to possess more sense than a majority of men. "Ronan, if that horse hadn't any more brains than you or a good many other men, you would have been killed," he said. The squire said he understood that Ronan crossed and recrossed the railroad tracks several times and on one occasion, while he was lashing the horse, it stopped just as an express train dashed by. Ronan acknowledged that he had been drinking and a spirit of "deviltry" seized him, when he saw a team tied in a livery stable yard. Fearing discovery Ronan left the team and the horse returned to the stable.

OFFICIAL MINUTES OF THE BOARD OF FREEHOLDERS.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union was held in the Courthouse on Thursday, March 2, 1911, at 2:30 p. m.

Roll call showed the following members present: Director Cady. Freeholders Acken, Bourdon, Crane, Darby, Doane, Fay, Gruener, Hall, Hennessy, Jones, Krouse, Meisel, Perry, Pierson, Randolph, Smith, Teller and Wilbur—20.

On motion of Freeholder Wilbur the minutes of the meeting of February 2 were approved as per printed copies on members' desks.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Board of Freeholders.

Gentlemen—While driving on business, on September 19, 1910, on Westfield avenue, near postoffice No. 4, my wagon was overturned, the horse was injured and the total damage amounted to $250. This was due to the raised car tracks, and I consequently made a claim to the Public Service Railway Company and have just been informed by them that I lodge my complaint with you, as they claim that you are at fault and not they.

I shall be pleased to meet your representative so that I can discuss this matter with him so that we can bring it to a satisfactory conclusion. Awaiting to hear from you, I beg to remain,

Yours truly,
MARKS FISHBEIN,
19 Holland street, Newark, N. J.

January 2, 1911.

On motion of Freeholder Krouse duly made and seconded, was referred to the County Road Committee.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union.

Gentlemen—Complying with the resolution of this board, adopted at its last meeting, I herewith enclose detailed statement of receipts and disbursements for the Registrar's County Clerk's, Surrogate's and Sheriff's office for the year 1910 and the month of January, 1911.

Respectfully submitted,
N. R. Leavitt,
County Collector.

Garwood, N. J., Feb. 28, 1911.

Mr. George G. Teller, Cranford, N. J.

Dear Sir—The undersigned members of the Street Committee of the Borough of Garwood, having been directed by the Mayor and Council of the said borough to investigate the reason for the volume of water which is now running through the gutters of the borough, have found that the trouble lies in the fact that the surface water from nearly all of the points of the borough and part of Westfield is now being drained toward Centre street, in Garwood, and, as a consequence, when there is a heavy rainfall Centre street is usually flooded from curb to curb. In order to distribute this drainage through some of the other streets, we find it will be necessary to lay drain pipes at the crossings of a number of the streets running parallel with Centre street, so that some of the water can be drained to the brook on these streets and we would kindly request that you take the matter up with the Board of Chosen Freeholders with the request that they furnish us with about 350 feet of twelve-inch iron pipe so that we can construct the necessary culverts to prevent this great flow of water to Centre street.

We trust that you will be successful in procuring this pipe for us, as it is very urgently needed and will be of great benefit to the Borough of Garwood.

Very truly yours,

J. H. HILDNER,
H. M. WYCKOPP,
Street Committee.

EXHIBITION O'NEILL-ADAMS CO. AND SALE

THE QUALITY STORE OF 6th AVE.

6th AVE. & 20th TO 22nd ST. — ESTABLISHED 1826

Merchandise History Has Not Equalled This 1911 Spring Exhibition and Attending Sale

March 20, 21 and 22,

To Which You Are Cordially Invited

This is by far New York's most significant shopping event, finding expression in surroundings which have been completely rebuilt and enlarged from basement to roof in both buildings. The force and energy expended in this transformation has been communicated to the greatly augmented stocks of new spring lines.

An immense aggregation of merchandise has been assembled, and priced so unusually low as to make this opening an event logically rivalling in savings the most favored of the year, and at a time when goods are usually at flood tide prices—a fact evident to the most casual observer.

Thus we are offering the most brilliant display for critical inspection, either from the style standpoint or economy motive, that it has been our pleasure ever to present, including O'Neill Millinery, O'Neill Women's and Misses' Suits and Wraps, O'Neill Silks, O'Neill Dress Goods, O'Neill Waists, O'Neill Laces, O'Neill Wash Goods, Trimmings and Gloves, etc., etc. Whatever the line, whether ready-to-wear apparel or novelties of all descriptions, here you will find the fullest assortment and the greatest variety obtainable; and here you will find embodied in this Exhibition and Sale the one paramount fact that in many instances a dollar will approximately do the work of two.

O'Neill Main Store—Second Floor (Formerly Adams Building).

Whether it be the new helmets in lace and straw, or the more unique novelties known as the "extreme" types, here all will be found in complete detail, embracing the newest colors and French adaptations

Some are on block shapes, in fine and new rough nacre braids, also hats made over wire frames and suitably adorned with ribbons, flowers and wings.

At $15 distinctive millinery creations—that will appeal immediately to fashionable dressers. Every one is a model in itself and of materials that have been blended here and there in a manner peculiar to the newest imported French models. These are adaptations that elimnate and modify to suit New York taste.

At $20 We offer you a line of High Grade Trimmed Hats, including ostrich effects that are original creations of our own designers, as well as true copies of Hats by noted Parisian milliners. These Hats possess that elusive air and charm, the swerving lines and graceful curves that mark the handiwork of true artists.

On motion of Freeholder Pierson, duly made and seconded, was referred to the County Road Committee.

Elizabeth, March 2, 1911.
Clerk of Union County Board of Freeholders.

My Dear Sir—I am herewith enclosing you duplicate petition to the Board of Freeholders in reference to Westfield avenue, one signed by property-owners east of Bayway, and the other by property-owners west of Bayway, and would ask that you kindly present the same at today's meeting of the Board of Freeholders.

I am also enclosing letter which I wish that you would also present to the Board of Freeholders at today's meeting.

Thanking you in advance for your courtesy, I am

Yours truly,
SAMUEL KOESTLER.

The petition, as enclosed, is as follows:

Elizabeth, N. J., Feb. 20, 1911.
To the Honorable Board of Freeholders.

Gentlemen—The undersigned have recently been appointed a committee by the Men's Club of the All Souls church, located at corner of Stiles street and Westfield avenue, in this city, to urge upon you the necessity of paving the north side of Westfield avenue. The Men's Club of All Souls church is absolutely nonsectarian, and its primary object is the betterment of the neighborhood's condition, and the general public of the city and county. This committee begs to advise you that similar committees have been appointed in Roselle Park and in the new El Mora section, and we would suggest that your board take immediate steps looking toward the improvement and pavement of the "County Boulevard," and in order to carry this out we would further suggest that if you have no committee upon the subject a special committee be appointed with power to confer with the various committees who are now taking up this matter on behalf of the property-owners and residents along the "County Boulevard." We consider this of paramount importance and hope that your houorable board will give it the prompt attention which it justly deserves.

Respectfully submitted,
SAMUEL KOESTLER,
SAMUEL T. JONES,
E. K. TUCKER,
Committee.

On motion by Freeholder Krouse, duly made and seconded, was referred to the County Road Committee.

Elizabeth, N. J., Feb. 20, 1911.
To the Honorable Board of Freeholders.

The undersigned being property-owners and residents along the line of Westfield avenue, in the limits of the City of Westfield, do respectfully petition your honorable body to take up and give due consideration to the matter of improving Westfield avenue. And we would again bring to your attention the deplorable conditions which existed along this avenue during the summer of 1910. By reason of the north side of the avenue being unimproved the entire road becomes a mud hole in winter and a dust pool in summer, and it is, therefore, the sense of your petitioners that immediate steps be taken for their relief. Your petitioners, therefore, pray that your honorable board will give due consideration to the matter of paving the north side of Westfield avenue, and to the relieving all of the residents along and in the neighborhood of Westfield avenue from the dust conditions of the coming summer.

And your petitioners will ever pray, etc.

EL MORA ASSOCIATION "INC."
By the president, JOHN P. CLARKE, and others.

The Sewer Question.

The sewer question seems likely to become the next bugbear to disturb the peace of our councilmen. It is a big and costly undertaking to change our disposal system from the river to beds where the sewage is treated. We believe still, as we have said a number of times, that the State authorities should not order a change of this kind until they have worked out a general system for the whole State. Whenever a town is ready to locate sewage disposal beds it has the same difficulty as Plainfield has. It does not want to have the plant near its own borders and no one else wants it. The principal is all right, but it is not yet on a practical basis. It is a case of placing a nuisance at your own back door or carrying it over to your neighbor's. By the former method you endanger the health and comfort of your own family and by the latter you become a nuisance and menace to your neighbor. It is probably right that the State should step in and prevent the streams from being polluted but the State, at the same time, should offer a definite plan for various communities as, for instance towns in the Raritan valley. Council had better withhold definite action as long as this kind may result.—Unionist-Gazette, Somerville.

N. Y. AMUSEMENTS.

"Over Night" at the Hackett is now in the flood tide of success. The cleverness of this merry farce, and the fact that it furnishes some of the best laughs in town, has permitted the community, and crowded houses are the rule. The misadventures of Mr. and Mrs. Darling and Mr. and Mrs. Kettle, the honeymooners, whose affairs get tangled in a most amusing and yet plausible way, furnish comedy that is as novel as it is irresistible. "Over Night" is especially interesting for its character drawing. The suffragette, the fortune hunter, the husbandette, the hotel clerk, and other types are funny because they are true to life. Margaret Lawrence, Jean Newcombe, Norma Winslow, Herbert A. Yost, A P. Aylsworth and other clever people are in the cast.

The lilt and rhythm of "The Spring Maid" melodies swept the town at a joyous bound. As was predicted on the opening night, its seductive music is being whistled and hummed by everyone that can whistle or hum in town. Orders for "Day Dreams," "Two Little Love Bees,' and "The Fountain Fay" songs are pouring in from all over the country at the rate of 20,000 a week. "The Spring Maid" has become not only the fashion, but the craze—one of those tremendous musical hits that come only once in a decade. It is all so joyful and comic and melody that everyone wants to see it again and again. It may be a year before New York will allow "The Spring Maid" to leave the Liberty. Not a bad start for the young producing firm of Werba and Luescher.

INDIAN RELICS MAY GO TO STATE MUSEUM.

Joseph B. Livezy, a well-known member of the Society of Friends of Gloucester county, who recently died at his home in Mount Royal, has willed his collection of minerals and Indian relics to the New Jersey State Museum, which will greatly add to the educational exhibit now owned by the State.

Mr. Livezy was one of the several Gloucester county men who aided in adding to the collection of the museum, until New Jersey has today the best educational museum in the country. Of late several citizens of the State have signified their intention of contributing their collections of minerals, birds, mammals and Indian relics to the museum, and the curator, Silas R. Morse, is now trying to get an enlargement to the present museum, which is greatly overcrowded, so as to be able to house and properly exhibit these priceless gifts.

SELL FRANKLIN'S HOME.

Holm Estate Was Famous in Colonial Days.

The entire tract of the Holm estate, known in Perth Amboy as the "Westminster," built by Benjamin Franklin's father and occupied by the younger Franklin and Aaron Burr during colonial times, was sold in Perth Amboy Thrusday afternoon by C. C. Hommann, acting as a special master in chancery. The sale resulted from a suit of Emil Koyen, of Perth Amboy, against J. P. Holm, the former owner.

Over a score of real estate dealers and lawyers from Perth Amboy were prsent and the large estate, which Perth Amboy at one time proposed to purchase as a landmark, was sold in parcels of one or more lots. The selling continued until last evening. James Parker, of Jersey City, purchased a parcel of three lots at $3,380. Other buyers were Perth Amboy parties.

The present tournament will soon end and this committee has been appointed to select a prize for the winner: Wilbur Tovell, Charles Shuck and Fred Van Hoesen.

Robert Murray also danced and sang. The affair was a decided success in every way.

Chalmers MOTOR CARS

are units of efficiency and beauty. No part is "skimped;" no line is out of harmony.

The Chalmers "30" is a perfectly balanced car. Its motor is powerful enough to take the car everywhere a car can go—it has as much speed as any man can use.

The car is heavy enough to ride well on any road, but not so heavy as to load the motor with useless weight.

The frame is heavy and strong; the wheels are large and of the best materials; the rear axle is of the full-floating type; the brakes are powerful and easily operated; highest grade ball bearings are used throughout motor and transmission; the motor valves are large, giving the maximum of power; the unit power plant insures perfect alignment of working parts; the best nickle steel is used throughout the chassis.

In fact, the things which are advertised as "features" of other cars are found as a matter of course in the Chalmers.

Chalmers cars are designed and built to give satisfaction in every condition of motoring. 14,000 Chalmers owners would tell you that they do give satisfaction, if you could ask them.

ERIN'S GREATNESS

Ireland Gave Ancient World Its Learning Says Cork University Professor.

IT WAS CENTRE OF CULTURE.

Father Murphy Tells Hibernians That In Mediaeval Times Emerald Island Taught Europe What It Knew.

There was a gathering of large proportions at St. Mary's R. C. church last evening when Rev. James Murphy, professor of Sacred Eloquence, of Cork University, addressed the members of the local branch of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. "Faith and Fatherland" was the subject of Father Murphy's talk and before he was able to get away after the service he was made to understand the high appreciation that was felt by those who were fortunate to have heard the discourse.

After showing what a force for spiritual things Ireland had been in all history Father Murphy declared that the modern world would some day be surprised to learn just how much it owes to the Irish monks. Continuing, he said, in part:

"It was those same missionaries travelling through Europe during the sixth, seventh and eighth centuries that brought order and religion among savage tribes, who then held sway over what was once the proud Roman Empire. Were it not for Ireland and the work her sons did in Europe during those early days, the learning of the ancient world would have been lost; and the great era of Mediaeval Art and Science and Literature would have been unknown. Just think of it, almost everything that is essential in our civilization today comes down to us from mediaeval times—our art, our science, our laws—these have not had their origin with us, but with the people of the older times. And it was the Irish monks who first brought these things to Europe.

"You hear an amount of talk today about Galileo, who is supposed to be the Father of Modern Astronomy. Why, my friends, seven hundred years before Galileo was heard of, an Irish monk, Virgil, who had gone to Salzburg, taught the heliocentric system of astronomy. Virgil, and Columbanus, and Dungal and Gall, and Erigena and Alcuin—these and others of their countrymen were the men who built churches, schools, libraries, and universities in Europe in the great age of Charlemagne. They were the men who founded the mediaeval era of learning."

At the close of his oration, the preacher referred to the sacrifices Ireland made for her faith. He said that the grandfathers and grandmothers of some who were now listening to him died on the mountain side in defence of the altar and the priest and the mass. "Will you, my friends," he said, "shame the blood of your sires? Will you value lightly the privilege of attending that divine sacrifice when they bought that privilege with so much sorrow and suffering?"

Concluding his sermon, he said: "It is indeed a gratification for me to know that here in Plainfield you have given splendid evidence of zeal in the preservation of that holy faith. You are winning your way against an opposition that is fast fading and you are coming to your own among the people of your community. The buildings about me, your church, your parochial school, your commercial school, your beautiful new convent, your social hall, all tell the story of your patient continued sacrifices, and your certainty of the principle that actuates them."

After the services a committee waited on Father Murphy to congratulate him and to thank him for his oration. One of the members remarked: "You're a stranger here, Father." "No," he said, with a soft Dublin brogue and a droll look in his eye, "an Irishman is at home everywhere. You see, this is my country, too. It was our people who made it what it is and it may well depend upon the courage of our people to defend its flag against all invaders."

STEREOPTICAN TALK ON THE IMMIGRANT

Rev. Herman F. Schwartz, of New York, occupied the pulpit of the Congregational church twice yesterday. In the morning he preached a sermon on "Home Missions" and in the evening delivered a lecture on the "Stranger Within Our Gates." The latter was illustrated with stereopticon views and had to do with the immigration problem. During this talk Mr. Swartz said that it was seriously contemplated by the Congregational Mission Board, seeking the necessary co-operation of the steamship companies for permanent missionary work aboard the transatlantic liners. It is proposed to have aboard each immigrant vessel a missionary who will give his services to the incoming stranger, form his acquaintance during the voyage and prepare him for the new world by short appeals to the religious instinct. He gave it as his opinion that the Church was the only solution to the problem presented by the million of aliens coming to this country.

Among other things Mr. Swartz said that America means liberty to the world, but too often the word liberty is translated "license" by the immigrant and it falls to the lot of the missionary to correct the latter view. He also declared that the immigrant in most cases receives better treatment at the hands of Uncle Sam than do first class passengers going from here to Europe.

There are 347 churches in this country conducted by the Congregationalists in which the foreign languages of their congregations are used: Armenian, Bohemian, Chinese, Danish, Finnish, French, German, Indian, Japanese, Mexican, Swedish and Welch. Of these 110 are German. The Pole is one of the hardest problems to solve, but great headway is being made among this people.

The pictures thrown on the screen showed the types from various countries in their native costumes, the methods of travel, squalid accommodations on shipboard, examinations at Ellis Island and other interesting features of the "Problem."

Canon Abbott Says Christians Should Crush Longing to Escape Cares.

JEREMIAH AS AN EXAMPLE.

Scholarly Canadian Clergyman Addresses Large Congregations at Grace Episcopal Church.

Before a congregation which completely filled Grace Episcopal church yesterday morning, Rev. Canon Almon Abbott, of Christ Church Cathedral, Hamilton, Canada, preached a remarkably lucid and helpful sermon on a lesson taken from Jeremiah's Lamentations. Two verses from widely separated chapters were used in juxtaposition to illustrate the Prophet's peculiar temperament. Applied to modern conditions the lesson accounted easily for the "blue Monday" of national experience and the value of overcoming its peculiarly depressing effects.

The speaker said that Jeremiah was tempted to leave the Jews to themselves and hie him away to Babylon, the center and vortex of the civilization of his time, but instead he went to Mizpah to comfort his people.

"The longing to escape," said Canon Abbott, "the drudgery of everyday life is with us all. We fret and fume and rage against it all and we want to escape it. So it was with Jeremiah, but like a gallant man he faced his duties. The craving for release comes to everyone. We long to escape responsibilities, but we more often long to escape self. We all know as we grow older that we carry ourselves with us to the edge of the grave. Self is something we cannot get rid of. To be happy is the gift of genius.

"Then we have day dreams. The rose-covered cottage of our imaginations, with its comfortable and inviting interior looks to us as refuge from the cares of life, but self goes to the cottage with us. Excitement of the various kinds in modern life affords but a brief moment of forgetfulness, and here you have the craving for sensations—in the church and out of it. Strong drink is but one of the methods of self forgetfulness, and back of it all is the deep-seated desire to escape something.

"Christ never said to the sinner, 'he's a little fast' or 'she's a little gay;' but He looked facts squarely in the face and told them as He found them. The so-called New Thought is as old as the everlasting hills. Exactly the same human nature is with us as it was with the men of biblical history.

"The duty of the Christian is to overcome and crush his longing to escape the cares of his sphere of life. Did not Jesus long to lay down the burden? With all the power at His command to escape it did He not choose the way of the cross and humiliation? He prayed 'If this be possible let this cup pass from me,' but He strangled the longing and said, 'not as I will, but as thou wilt.'

"We are but stewards placed here to account later for what was given as our portion of the cosmic universe. We must not falter, but press ever onward and upward. Do you not realize this in this great country of yours? All the passion and turmoil around about you, the excitement of living, the rush after preeminence, these are but evanescent things. Your real duty is to look to Him whose example is easy to follow and enjoy with the faithful laborer at the end, the fruit of your labor."

Canon Abbott preached to another large congregation in the afternoon.

ENDEAVORERS' RECEPTION FOR PASTOR AND WIFE.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society of Temple Baptist church, tendered a reception to Rev. John W. Musson and his wife on Friday afternoon. Mrs. Charles W. Griffen, superintendent of the society, was assisted in preparing the exercises by Mrs. Frank Stewart and Mrs. Edward Baker, Jr.

Miss Verna Stewart, president of the society, presented a gift to Mr. and Mrs. Musson as a token of esteem from the members, which was received in a delightful manner by the pastor, who will soon take up another charge in Meriden, Conn. "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" was sung as a fitting close to the exercises.

SWISS AUTO PLANT

Famous Adolph Saurer Trucks, are to be Reproduced in Plainfield.

CONCERN'S CAPITAL $1,600,000.

Reproduction of Arbon, Switzerland, Type of Car to Be Begun Here By Company Owning the American Right.

Details of the organization of the Saurer Motor Company, which is headed by a number of New York capitalists who have acquired the American rights on the Saurer motor truck from Adolph Saurer, of Arbon, Switzerland, have been perfected. The new company is incorporated under the laws of New Jersey and capitalized at $1,600,000, of which $600,000 is preferred and the balance common stock. The entire amount is paid up and the company will immediately begin to manufacture three, five and seven ton Saurer trucks at its plant in this city.

C. Philip Coleman, formerly vice president, secretary and treasurer of the Singer Sewing Machine Company, is president; Frank S. Richardson, treasurer, and Vernon Munroe, secretary. The Board of Directors is headed by William D. Sargent, president of the Reading Steel Casting Company, and includes a number of prominent New York men, among whom are Frederick H. Eaton, president of the American Car and Foundry Company; Charles H. Sabin, vice president of the Guaranty Trust Company; Otis H. Cutler, president of the American Brake Shoe and Foundry Company; W. G. Pearce, vice president of the same company; Benjamin Strong, Jr., vice president of the Bankers' Trust Company; Arthur H. Lockett, of Pomroy Brothers, bankers; Hunter Marston, of Blair & Co., bankers, and George B. Case, of White & Case, attorneys.

Steps toward the organization of the company were taken some time ago, so that with its acquirement of an extensive and completely equipped plant here it is in a position to begin manufacturing at once. As the Saurer truck has been imported here for several years a well fitted service building with a complete stock of repair parts is maintained in New York. This, as well as the Chicago salesrooms and repair shop, have also been taken over by the new company.

In addition to the standard types of Saurer motor trucks, of which almost a hundred are now in service in this country, motor 'buses, fire apparatus, street sprinklers, oil sprinklers and other special types of machines will be built.

ELIZABETHANS TOAST ERIN'S PATRON SAINT

Attended by more than 150 guests many of them from out of town, including half a score from Plainfield, the seventeenth annual banquet of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick was held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, Elizabeth, last night. Nearly all the city officials of Elizabeth were present.

The affair was the most successful ever held by the society. Six speakers extolled the greatness and virtues of the land of the shamrock.

Festoons of the national colors hid the side walls and the green flag was largely displayed. Potted plants and flowers also added beauty to the decorations. During the banquet Wetton's string orchestra played national and Irish airs. There was much enthusiasm.

Frank Bergen, chief counsel of the Public Service Corporation, acted as toastmaster. Mr. Bergen was introduced by Chairman Dennis F. Collins. Howard MacSherry responded to the toast of "America, Our Country." The Rev. John J. Murphy was the next speaker, and his toast was "The Day We Celebrate." "New Jersey" was given as a toast by Britton D. Evans. Peter F. Daly spoke on "Influence of Irish Character Upon National Destiny." Joseph M. Noonan, concluded with "Friendly Sons."

THE 'PORTSMOUTH'

G. M. Christian, First President of Naval Reserves, Tells Vessel's History.

TRAINING SHIP SINCE 1898.

Launched in 1843, it Was Engaged in Mexican War and Saw Service in China and in the Civil War.

The likelihood of the old training ship Portsmouth being turned over to the hospital authorities in New York after an inspection at the Brooklyn Navy yard has brought to mind the part some Plainfielders took in securing the old vessel for training the naval reserves in 1898.

George M. Christian was one of the organizers of the Naval Reserves and the first president of that organization. He still possesses the original telegram received from Assistant Secretary of the Navy William McAdoo, which was sent in response to an appeal for the use of the ship as a training vessel. There were no docking facilities in Hoboken, where the Government sent the vessel, but Mr. Christian through his influence with Colonel E. A. Stevens secured a dock and the vessel was well received and cared for during the time she was in commission.

Mr. Christian also demolished the old Stevens Battery which was the first submarine ever constructed in the country although it never was used as a fighting machine. In speaking of the Portsmouth this morning Mr. Christian recalled some of the history of the vessel and said he deplored the fact that she would probably pass out of the ken of her old friends as marine hospital.

The Portsmouth was built at the Navy Yard, Portsmouth, N. H. She was launched in 1843. At the beginning of the Mexican war she was on the Pacific coast. On July 9, 1846, she hoisted the Stars and Stripes at Yerba Buena, now San Francisco, thereby saving California to the United States. It was this historical act that prompted Californians to ask the department to send the vessel to San Francisco, to be used as a naval museum and to be preserved as a relic. The department agreed to do so if the cost of putting her in shape for such a voyage was not too great.

The Portsmouth also cruised on the west coast of Africa while engaged in the suppression of the slave trade. She came to be known as "the temperance ship" on account of the fact that her whole complement took the pledge to abstain from intoxicants for one year. The pledge was kept, according to history. In 1856 she rendered brilliant service in action against the barrier forts at Canton, China, under Commander Foote, at which time the British ships present manned their rigging and gave three rousing cheers for the Portsmouth.

The Portsmouth was with Admiral Farragut at the mouth of the Mississippi River during the civil war. Until recently she carried the same battery of 8-inch guns which she carried during the civil war. In 1879 she was made a training ship for boys and in 1895 was turned over to the New Jersey Naval Militia.

Musson, pastor of the Temple Baptist church, officiated.

Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served and later Mr. and Mrs. Huff left for a brief trip. On returning they will make their home in this city. The groom is an electrician.

MARTINE UNABLE TO ATTEND SESSION

Senator James E. Martine, who has been suffering from a relapse of the trouble which kept him in his room during his election, is reported today as being much improved, but it is not certain that he will be able to attend the extraordinary session which is to convene in Washington on April 4. It is believed that he will recover more rapidly if he remains in his home.

Aside from the trouble in his ears Senator Martine is reported as enjoing normal physical health. He has been advised by his physician, according to his brother, D. W. Martine, that a little more time spent quietly indoors will be more conducive to complete recovery than a too early exit. At any rate it is expected that the Senator will heed the advice of his doctor and do what is possible to conserve his strength so that when the 62d Congress opens he may be in fit condition to serve his constituents to the best of his ability.

COURT MAKES THEM TAKE PLEDGE FOR YR.

Whiskey, which he said was taken to relieve an attack of cramps, proved too much for Edward Dennis, of New Market, who came to this city on Saturday to transact some business. He was found helplessly intoxicated at the corner of West Fourth street and Clinton avenue, and brought to police headquarters, Judge DeMeza discharged him this morning when Dennis promised to take the pledge.

Others who promised to take the pledge for at least a year were Bartholomew Taylor, 65 years old, of the west end; Sosalestra Seymour, of East Front street; Michael Kennedy, of West Third street; and Edward Washington, colored, of the East End. Washington will get the limit for his next offense.

MRS. WHALEN PROVES NON-SUPPORT CHARGE

The non-support charge preferred by Mrs. Agnes Whalen against her husband, Max Whalen, of Brook avenue, was heard by Justice Snape in the borough, this morning. After a two hour session, the complaint was upheld. Whalen was ordered to furnish a bond for $250 to guarantee the payment of $6 a week to his wife. The couple have been married only ten months.

In her testimony, Mrs. Whalen alleged that her husband was in the habit of returning home intoxicated and generally inflicted some sort of abuse upon her. He finally ejected her from the house, she said, telling her to remain away. Whalen entered a general denial of the charges and produced several witnesses to testify in his behalf. He was represented by Walter L. Hetfield, while F. J. Blatz appeared for Mrs. Whalen.

COVENANT MEETING AT TEMPLE BAPTIST.

The mid-week meeting of the Temple Baptist church will be a covenant meeting preparatory for the communion service to be held next Sunday morning. The Wednesday evening and next Sunday services will be the last to be conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. W. Musson. The Sunday-school is preparing a special farewell service for next Sunday afternoon in which God speed will be the wish expressed for Mr. Musson in his new field of endeavor in Meriden, Conn.

GIVE 2 MEMORIALS

Stained Glass Window and Altar for St. Peter's Lutheran Church.

IN MRS. ANNA HEINS' MEMORY.

Both Gifts of Mrs. Richard Moldenke and Mrs. Charles Moldenke in Honor of Their Departed Mother.

In memory of Mrs. Anna Heins, mother of Mrs. Richard Moldenke and Mrs. Charles Moldenke, a handsome stained-glass window and a new oak altar have been given St. Peter's Lutheran church on Grove street, of which Mrs. Heins was a faithful member for several years. Both the window and the altar will be dedicated on Sunday morning, April 2, by the pastor of the church, Rev. John Duerschner. The service will be in German.

The window, which represents "The Christ," is from the celebrated painting by Hoffman. It was designed by Charles Lamb, of J. & R. Lamb, New York city. The inscription at the bottom of the window reads: "In Memory of Our Beloved Mother," and below that appears the names of Mrs. Richard Moldenke and Mrs. Charles Moldenke. It is an unusually fine piece of work. The new altar is made of a handsome piece of solid oak.

Another appreciated improvement is a handsome new carpet, the gift of Mrs. Dorothea Taylor, of Grandview avenue, the mother of Mrs. Hiram A. Woodruff. The window, the altar and new carpet are now being put in the church so that everything will be in readiness for April 2.

Mrs. Heins, in whose memory the window and altar are given, formerly resided at New Rochelle, N. Y. She lived here for about five years, and passed away about a year and a half ago, while visiting at Montclair. She was much beloved by all who knew her and was well-known for her many charitable acts while a resident of this city.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles Moldenke are now enjoying a cruise in the West Indies, but they expect to reach home in time for the dedication services on April 2.

Our Formal Opening Display of SPRING MILLINERY Tuesday, Wedneday and Thursday, March 21, 22 and 23

This fixed event of this store, and the one always looked forward to with interest and expectancy by the women of Plainfield, is of more than usual importance this season, mainly because it is our formal opening of the season and because of the extensive preparations which have been made to make it a noteworthy occasion in every sense of the word.

Here you will find a vivid portrayal of the styles which have been decreed as absolutely correct for spring wearing. In the Millinery Department our broad, satisfying assemblage of models embraces the small turban trimmed with but a single rose to the large picture hat gracefully draped with flowers and ribbons.

And in the ready to wear department the gathering of models is so very extensive, in every way, you will be bound to become impressed with the beauty of our stocks and the splendid values we offer.

We cordially invite you to visit this important display and assure you you will find much of interest, and that the display will help you wonderfully in making a satisfying selection.

Saving As a Habit

Economy is not a natural trait—men and women save money because they have been trained to do so. The advantages of saving have been illustrated so forcibly either by personal experience or observation of others that they begin to acquire the saving habit themselves.

When you acquire the saving habit, you're on the high road to prosperity.

Extravagance is unscientific and leads nowhere except toward failure. The saving habit is your grip on the ladder of success.

The best time to start acquiring the saving habit is in childhood. Start your boy or girl right. Open a savings account for them and teach them the value of money.

Fidelity Trust Co.

NEWARK, N. J.,

will be glad to help you in this matter. It accepts in its Savings Department accounts as small as $2.

SPORTS
News and Notes

BASEBALL.

Manager Fred Tenney, of the Boston Nationals, wants to get Harry Steinfeldt, the Cubs' veteran third baseman. Chicago wants a good pitcher, and Chance has suggested that Mattern be traded for the veteran. But it isn't likely that Boston will let Mattern go.

Manager Hal Chase, of the Yankees, is negotiating for Justin Fitzgerald, centre fielder of the Santa Clara College team in California. The youngster does not want to go into professional baseball until after he finishes his college course in June. He has promised Chase first call on his services.

Vic Willis, who was bought by the Chicago team, but has announced his retirement as a player, will not be out of the game. He is going to manage the Newark (Del.) team in the Tri-County League of Delaware this season. Willis will also manage a hotel in the same town.

Workmen are already grooming the turf at the Polo Grounds, and the infield and part of the outfield are covered with heavy canvas every night. Carpenters are rebuilding parts of the centre field bleachers, and various repairs are being made to the entrances. The geraniums and the creeping ivy are to be planted just as soon as it is warm enough.

Charley Schmidt, the Detroit catcher, who made his successful debut as a pugilist a few nights ago, has decided that the ring is no place for him, so he has notified the Tigers that he will join the squad at the end of the month.

The direful tale came out of New Orleans a few days ago that Jack Pfeister, the Chicago southpaw, had a weak heart, and was out of baseball forever. Pfeister returned to Chicago very much scared after the information he received from a Southern physician. He went to a doctor in Chicago, who informed him that his heart was in fine condition and that his trouble was only indigestion. Pfeister is scheduled to rejoin the Cubs very soon.

Walter Johnson, the speedy Washington pitcher, has proved to be the real hold-out of the season. He has turned down cold the three-year contract offered him by Manager McAleer, which calls for $7,000 a year. Johnson has told President Noyes that he proposes to ask for more salary each year and does not want to sign a contract for more than one season. President Noyes intimates that if Johnson's demands increase each year, in a few years he will be getting all the profits of the club. The breach between the pitcher and the club is now so wide that it is not unlikely that Johnson will quit the team at the Atlanta training camp and return to his home in Ceffeyville, Kan.

Neal Ball, who used to perform on the Hilltop, and who engineered a famous triple play at Cleveland in 1909, refuses to report with the Portland (Ore.) team, and announces that he will play with a semi-professional team in Chicago or on the coast rather than go back to a bush league.

Johnny Priest, the shortstop whom Manager Chase has turned over to Indianapolis, used to be employed in the Department of Agriculture at Washington. He began his baseball career in the Department League. Chase let him go because he has too much infield material.

GOLF.

Although no official action has as yet been taken in the matter, it is not unlikely that an effort will be made to hold the next championship tournament of the Eastern Professional Golfers' Association over a course other than in the metropolitan district. A number of the "pros" connected with the Massachusetts clubs would like to see the attraction held over their way again. On one occasion the Eastern was decided at Brookline, and Alec Campbell, of the home club, won.

So far as that goes, the Philadelphia district may also have to be considered when it comes to making the selection of a course. Philadelphia professionals have thus far patronized this championship meeting in larger numbers than their Boston brothers. In one way it is quite natural for the Eastern "pros" to hold their annual meeting hereabouts, for the reason that more than half of the association membership is made up of golfers located in this vicinity.

Provided the association is anxious to select a time that would not conflict with some other important attraction, care will be needed in picking out the date. This is especially so with regard to the metropolitan district, which is going to be unusually crowded with tournament fixtures. A little later, when most of the winter travellers have returned from the South as well as abroad, they will get together. The tournament last year was won by James Maiden, of Nassau.

We WANT COMPETITION of the Right Sort, Not the Following Kind!

A Mrs. S—— after selecting her outfit and learning the total cost from our plainly marked price tags, said she preferred to make comparisons elsewhere before ordering, to which we readily agreed, for it's a thing we always URGE!

On getting another store's prices (where they were marked in private signs) she found ours were far less, and SAID so. The salesman promptly dropped to our figures—AND GOT THE ORDER.

Here, where there's but ONE PLAINLY MARKED PRICE ON EVERY ITEM, such an "accommodating" and sudden price drop would be impossible—here, when you read the price tag, you KNOW it's already at lowest point, for ALL prices are made and REMAIN on the SAME UNIFORMLY SMALL PROFIT BASIS. We don't HAVE to run a "leader" here and there for an hour, or a day, to catch trade, as ALL lines are equally good values EVERY day in the year!

All we want is HONEST competition that meet OUR plainly marked prices WITH prices you can READ!

MOVING PICTURES AS EDUCATIONAL FACTOR

"Moving Pictures As An Aid to Education" will be the subject on which John Collier, secretary of the National Board of Censorship of Moving Pictures, will speak tomorrow evening at the Plainfield High School. Mr. Collier has made the point that the possibilities in moving pictures are so great that they are inestimable and in order to prove it will exhibit some films well calculated to convince skeptics. H. S. Sanderson, manager of Proctor's theatre, has kindly loaned a picture machine and an operator for the evening so that there will be a first class exhibition.

In speaking today of the work of educating the masses Mr. Collier said that there are thousands of parents who have no conception of the real value of the moving picture. They object to it on general principles without first informing themselves upon its real virtues. Such people will have an opportunity tomorrow evening to learn why children like the pictures and some other interesting data about the work of censoring them so that the kind that ought never to be exhibited never get thrown upon the screen. Mr. Collier says that properly handled the moving picture is one of the greatest mediums of education within the grasp of the public today.

The lecture will be free to all.

Apropos of the subject a scientific journal publishes the following ditty by Gertrude McKenzie:

"No more we'll seek the picture shows
To drive away dull care;
To see how Casey got the goat,
Or watch the County Fair;
No more upon the screen we'll see
How Wilbur Wright can fly—
We'd rather watch the ptomaines jump,
And see the germs go by.

"No more we'll seek the far North pole
With Peary or with Cook,
Or scour the plains with Broncho Bill,
We'll watch the hookworm hook.
We'll no more laugh to see portrayed
The pranks of little Willie.
We'll watch the microbe do the stunts,
And cheer the new baccilli."

John Graham's name is not in the local directories of this city for the past five years.

MINISTER BRANDED SALOONS HELL-HOLES

Rev. Gabriel Reid Maguire, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist church, occupied the pulpit of the First Baptist church, yesterday morning, in exchange with the pastor, Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, and he delivered an interesting sermon to a large congregation. Mr. Maguire took his text from 2 Kings 6:17: "And Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

Mr. Maguire also made use of a portion of the preceding verse, "Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them," for the purpose of showing that Christians need have no fear if they only trust in God implicitly and follow his commandments.

During the course of his remarks, Mr. Maguire took occasion to briefly remark on what he considered as "places of iniquity" in this city, which he termed as "hell-holes." He said that while walking along Front street, Saturday night, he saw young men pouring into saloons and blaspheming the name of God. He said that he was praying for the time when such a condition would not exist in this city, that every one of these iniquitous places would be far removed from the temptation of man.

Rev. Dr. Blakemore, of Bellfontaine, Ohio, who is visiting Mr. Maguire, assisted in the service by reading the Scripture lesson and offering prayer.

Jurist Addresses Class.

Justice Frederick E. Crane, of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, addressed the members of the McWilliams' Bible class yesterday afternoon at Hope chapel. Judge Crane also addressed the Sunday school. His talk to the Bible class was listened to with much interest by the largest class present in months. George H. Beiser, of Prospect avenue, a warm personal friend, induced Judge Crane to appear at Hope chapel. Howard McWilliams, the leader of the class is also a boyhood friend of Mr. Crane.

Dr. Ard to Wed.

Announcement was made today of the engagement of Dr. Frank C. Ard, of Park avenue, and Miss Ida C. Chappelle, of New York city. No date for the wedding has been fixed. Miss Chappelle resides in New York with her sister, Mrs. Bond Thomas. She was a schoolmate of Miss Walbridge, of this city, in Brooklyn, and has many friends here.

Charles Greer, of the firm of Greer & Greenwood, was removed from his home in the Stirling building Saturday, to Muhlenberg Hospital to be treated for typhoid fever.

RELIGION IN HOME THEME OF A PASTOR

"Home Department Sunday" was observed at Trinity Reformed church yesterday morning, when the pastor, Rev. John Y. Broek, preached a special sermon to the members of the department, who were present in a body. Mr. Broek took for his text, "The Bible in the Home," Psalms 119:111, and in connection with his discourse remarked that the home department has an enrollment of 400 members and thirty-five visitors. It has the honor of being the second largest home department in the State.

Returning to his text, Mr. Broek said that the forming of a home department is a Providential act. It aims to secure a systematic study of the Bible in the home and is an effective connecting link to unite the home with the Sunday-school. Continuing, Mr. Broek said:

"The Bible will transform the home and make it a Christian home. There is less religious worship in the home at the present time than formerly; some homes have no family altar and some homes have no Bibles. The home should be the centre of religious instructions and the Sunday-school should only supplement the religious instruction of the home. Making the home the rim instead of the centre of religious instruction is contrary to God's purpose.

"The Bible will restore the family altar, which is essential for the blessing of the home, State and church. The progress of a nation depends upon the religious character of its citizens and the family altar is necessary for the church. The present home will make the future church."

Slight Fire in Apartment.

Damage to the amount of $50 was occasioned by a slight fire at the apartment of William Sutton in the Sebring building at 203 North avenue, shortly before 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. It originated in a waste paper basket in the bath room and was evidently caused by a cigar or cigarette stub. An alarm was turned in from box 21 and the department made short work of the flames with extinguishers. Thhe wainscotting was burned and the walls slightly blackened.

Violated Speed Law.

James L. Arrowsmith, of West Seventh street, appeared before Judge William G. DeMeza in the city court this morning charged by Patrolman McCarthy with running his Panhard automobile through Park avenue at a speed too high for safety. Judge DeMeza suspended sentence after warning Arrowsmith.

Mrs. Martin Cronce, of Essex street, who has been ill for some time, is now in a serious condition.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

An all star stage crew is one of the novelties which Jos. M. Gaites has introduced in "Bright Eyes," the new musical play by the authors of "Three Twins," which comes to the Plainfield theatre tonight. While the ordinary musical play carries a stage crew of four or five men filling up with local stage hands, Mr. Gaites is compelled to carry fourteen men, carpenters, property men and electricians. This is made necessary by the fact that the stage hands make one of their most important changes in full view of the audience. The first act of the play is laid on the stage of a theatre during a rehearsal of a musical comedy. The stage is shown absolutely bare but in the middle of the act comes the call for the setting of the scene. This is done in view of the audience. It was at first intended to have the change made by the chorus men dressed as stage hands, but this was found impossible for two reasons; first, the handling of scenery is work that requires long experience; and second, the union rules prevent the handling of scenery by anyone not a member of the Theatrical Mechanics Union. So Mr. Gaites' chief mechanic was commissioned to find a crew of fourteen carpenters, propertymen and electricians who could act and after considerable difficulty he did so. The regular house men are used in the flies and in other places where they are not seen and the chorus men, dressed as stage hands, pretend to assist, but the actual setting of the scene is done by the first all star stage crew ever gathered together. At the first performance of the play several of these men developed stage fright to an alarming degree, but Mr. Gaites promises that they will all be hardened actors by the time they search Plainfield and it is probable that they will have developed many of the eccentricities that make so many regular stars suh a burden to their managers.

Number 3
THE IMITATORS
Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.
You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.
Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

CERAN BILL CLASH EXPECTED TONIGHT

The future of the administration of Governor Wilson is likely to be decided in the Assembly, at Trenton, tonight with the test vote on the Geran Election Reform bill. Machine leaders of both the Republican and the Democratic parties are lined up against the measure, because of the fact that it revolutionizes the present election laws. The Governor insists that in no other way can the people come into self-government. The organization men will seek either to defeat it outright or so to amend it as to eliminate all of its radical features.

The Democratic party is badly split on the measure, and the Republican legislators are also divided. Twenty-seven of the Democratic members of the Assemlby are pledged by conferene promise to stand with the Governor, but that is four less than the required majority. The other House Democratis, fourteen in all, including Leader Matthews, declare they wil never stand for the bill. Friends of the Governor, however, are claiming five Republican votes. On the other hand Republican leaders declare that four of these men will vote against the measure.

The debate will doubtless be the bitterest of the sessions, and all sorts of tactics will be employed for and against the measure. If the bill is defeated Governor Wilson threatens to take the stump next fall against all who fail to assist him.

While the Assembly is struggling with the Geran bill this evening the Senators will be disposing of local option, the Gebhardt bill, to enable the people of the various municipalities to vote the saloons out of commission, at last coming up for final consideration. The defeat of the measure is assured.

Ordinarily adjournment would be reachced in three more weeks, yet a vast amount of work remains to be done. It is likely that this term will be prolonged a week or two past the usual quitting time.

William Tilley Hurt.

William Tilley, against whom a complaint of disorderly conduct was filed with City Judge William G. De Meza on Friday last, is at Muhlenberg hospital suffering from a dislocated shoulder caused by a fall while playing with some children at the home of Mrs. Bowman, on West Second street. The injury is not serious.

John Sweeney's Funeral.

The funeral services of John Sweeney, of this city, who died at St. Michael's hospital, Newark, last Wednesday, were held at Runyon's undertaking establishment Saturday afternoon. Rev. George A. Warner officiated. Interment was made at the Plainfield avenue cemetery. Captain S. A. Hewitt officiated at the grave.

Impersonations Tonight.

Impersonations of "Sky Pilot" will be given at Trinity Reformed church, this evening at 8 o'clock by Livingston Barbour, of Rutgers College, under the auspices of the Dutch Arms, men's association. Mr. Barbour has a national reputation and a rare treat is offered those who attend.

Democrats Meet Tonight.

EXPRESS COMPANIES TO FIGHT TO FINISH

The United States Express Company together with the other companies which are now involved in a labor argument with their men has decided to fight the issue to the bitter end. There will be no compromise so far as the companies are concerned and the result will determine once for all the question of fulfilling contracts demanded by the public.

According to dispatches received from New York this morning, the companies have taken a firm stand in the matter. It was rumored that the strikers had held a secret meeting in which all but a few of the leading spirits of the movement were anxious to return to work, but it was believed that the companies involved would not give in to the general demand and would fight to the last ditch.

The United States Company acceded on December 3 last to the demands of the then strikers and arrangements were made whereby both factions appeared to have been satisfied, but the "sympathetic" strike which was inaugurated on Thursday finds no parallell in the previous disturbance and consequently little sympathy.

Wilson Fredericks, the local agent of the U. S. Express Co., yesterday took with him ten men and went to Jersey City where they "dug out" all the packages for Plainfield distribution and saw them shipped and the result was a perfect service here. However, the shipment of perishable matter and animals for New York is refused at the local depot and ordinary stuff is received with the clause inserted "Subject to Delay" written in the way bill.

Today there has been no delay in the receipt of goods shipped in New York on Saturday, owing to the fact that the company employed upward of 100 men in the sorting and distribution of express packages which had accumulated in the Jersey City, Hoboken and Communipaw receiving offices. It is possible that within the next few days the men who are responsible for defections from the December agreement will be discharged from the service and others engaged in their places.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

The annual school meeting of the borough will be held tomorrow night in the Whittier School. The appropriation and three trustees are to be voted for. It is essential that every citizen should give the $500 item for industrial education his closest attention and vote accordingly. The same amount was asked for last year but was voted down.

The offering in St. John's church yesterday was taken simultaneously with churches in all parts of the Newark diocese, for the rebuilding of Mount St. Mary College, recently destroyed by fire.

Fire Chief Wyhnisky has been appointed janitor of the Lincoln School. During the past week he has been doing substitute duty for Night Marshal Davenport, who has been detained at home by illness.

The annual session of the Newark conference is to be held next week. It is probable that Rev. W. A. Knox will be returned to the local Methodist church.

The Daughters of Liberty will hold a dime social at the residence of Mrs. Harry Tomlinson, at New Market, on Tuesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wyhnsky have removed to Cranford, where they will make their home in the future.

Mrs. John Gray, of Trenton, has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Geo. Bunting, of New Market.

Funeral of Mrs. Herbert.

The funeral service of Mrs. Theresa Herbert was held at the home of W. J. Harper, 545 East Third street, Saturday afternoon, and was attended by a number of friends. Rev. J. W. Musson, pastor of the Temple Baptist church, officiated. The burial was in Hillside cemetery and the pall-bearers were James Lindsay, J. J. Neylon, R. W. Wilson and Fred W. Rosa.

Joseph Brandt.

Joseph Brandt, the eight-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Brandt, of Elm place, died in Muhlenberg hospital last night. He had been ill with diabetes and a complication of troubles. The funeral will be held at the parents' home this afternoon and burial wil be in the Gateville cemetery.

Edward E. Gilby, committee on finance and returns, will make an official visit to Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, Thursday evening.

Dr. D. C. Adams, of Grove street, is enjoying a week's rest and recreation on his preserve in Virginia.

H. C. Compton and his daughter, Miss Mary Compton, of this city, who have been enjoying the past three months at Nassau, Bahama Islands, returned home last night on one of the Ward Line steamers. Both are much benefitted in health and report having had a fine time.

—Leggett's Demulcent Cream of Witch Hazel is certainly a good seller. Hodge, the druggist in the Y. M. C. A. building, was compelled to send last week for a second consignment of the excellent toilet preparation.

WHISTLER IN A RAGE.

Lady Meux Made Him Fairly Splutter With Anger.

Whistler painted three portraits of Lady Meux, one of which, the "Sable Picture of Lady Meux," is missing. That one was the third for which Lady Meux sat to the eccentric artist. The other two are described in the Pennell's life of the artist as among his most distinguished portraits. Lady Meux "was handsome, of a more luxuriant type than the women who usually sat to him," and he "found for her harmonies appropriate to her beauty. The first was an 'Arrangement In White and Black,' which few people have seen. There is a sumptuousness in the black of the shadowy background and the velvet gown, in the white of the fur of the long cloak, that Whistler never surpassed. Whistler was pleased with it and spoke of it as his 'beautiful Black Lady.' Lady Meux was so well satisfied that she at once sat for a second portrait. This time the 'harmony' was in 'Flesh Color and Pink,' afterward changed to 'Pink and Gray.'"

The missing portrait was smaller. So far as the artist's biographers could find out, it was never finished. The explanation is probably to be found in this story, quoted in the "Life" from Mr. Harper Pennington:

"The only time I saw Jimmy 'stumped' for a reply was at a sitting of Lady Meux (for the portrait in sables). For some reason Jimmy became nervous—exasperated—and impertinent. Touched by something he had said, her ladyship turned softly toward him and remarked quite softly, 'See here, Jimmy Whistler, you keep a civil tongue in that head of yours or I will have in some one to finish those portraits you have made of me!' with the faintest emphasis on 'finish.' Jimmy fairly danced with rage. He came up to Lady Meux, his long brush tightly grasped and actually quivering in his hand, held tight against his side. He stammered, spluttered and finally gasped out: 'How dare you? How dare you?' But that, after all, was not an answer, was it? Lady Meux did not sit again. Jimmy never spoke of the incident afterward, and I was sorry to have witnessed it."

BLITZ WAS MODEST.

Yet Webster Wouldn't Give the Magician a Treasury Job.

During the presidency of Mr. Tyler I had occasion to call on Daniel Webster, then secretary of state.

Glancing at my card, he turned and readily extended his hand with, "Welcome, signor! No hocus pocus among my papers," covering them with his arms.

After explaining to him my object I received the required information. We laughed and chatted a few minutes, and I was about to retire when I mentioned that I was an applicant for office and hoped I could rely upon his influence in the matter.

"You, a magician, an office seeker, signor?"

"There is only one, sir, I aspire to; all others I should refuse without regard to their emoluments."

"Well, what one is that?" questioned the great statesman in his deep and powerful voice.

"Counting the treasury notes, Mr. Webster."

"The treasury notes, signor?"

"Yes, sir. You might give me 100,000 to count and watch me closely, but you would find only 75,000 when I returned them."

"Signor," he exclaimed, with lively animation, "there is no chance for you; there are better magicians here than you. For there would not be 50,000 left after their counting!"—From "Life and Adventures of Signor Blitz."

In the Wrong Church.

A Cleveland man recently told this story of the Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, famous New York divine of a generation ago:

A wealthy man came to him and said he wanted to rent one of the most expensive pews in the church. "But," he added, "I'll only take it on one condition—you mustn't expect me to do any church work."

The eminent rector smiled. "My friend," he replied, "you have come to the wrong church. You belong four blocks down the street, in the Church of the Heavenly Rest." — Cleveland Leader.

A Changed Man.

Admiral Capps, addressing a temperance society, told a story of one of the best men he had ever known, who quickly went from bad to worse because of excessive drinking until he became a total wreck.

"One evening," said the admiral, "this prematurely old, thin, worn out man with red rimmed eyes, said, 'You are a good, true, noble woman Jenny, and should have married a better man than I am.'

"Looking at him and thinking of what he once had been she quickly answered, 'I did, James.'"—New York Tribune.

A Religious Innovation.

A certain well brought up little girl who lives in the near vicinity of Rittenhouse square yawned at the breakfast table last Sunday morning and ventured a polite proposition to her mother.

"I really don't feel at all like going to church this morning," she remarked. "Can't we just send cards?"—Philadelphia Times.

Dolliver and the Dahlias.

The dahlia is a flower that is almost sacred to Scandinavians. When the late Senator Dolliver was speaking fo a Swedish settlement from the rear end of a Pullman car a bunch of dahlias was handed to him, and he bowed his thanks, while the crowd roared its applause for the orator and for the bouquet.

"What kind of flowers are these?" inquired Senator Dolliver of Senator Clapp of Minnesota.

"American Beauties, I guess," replied Senator Clapp.

Dolliver knew better than that, so he heartily thanked the people for their attention, applause and splendid flowers.

When they met in Washington after the campaign Senator Dolliver said to the Minnesota man: "Clapp, you would have had me mobbed if I hadn't been prudent. If I had called those dahlias American Beauties those Swedes would have been for killing me."

"Yes," said Senator Clapp, "they are good people and generally do the right thing."—Minneapolis Journal.

Why He Wept.

A man who was walking through a train inadvertently left the door of one of the cars open. A big man sitting in a seat in the middle of the car yelled: "Shut the door, you fool! Were you raised in a barn?"

The man who had left the door open closed it and then, dropping into a seat, buried his face in his hands and began to weep. The big man looked somewhat uncomfortable and, rising, finally walked up to the weeper and tapped him on the shoulder.

"My friend," he said, "I didn't intend to hurt your feelings. I just wanted you to close the door."

The man who was weeping raised his head and grinned. "Old man," he said, "I'm not crying because you hurt my feelings, but because you asked me if I was raised in a barn. The sad fact is that I was raised in a barn, and every time I hear an ass bray it makes me homesick."—Louisville Times.

The Speedier Way.

He simply couldn't help it. He was born lazy.

As a rule, if not too sleepy, he could get through a shave in about thirty-five minutes. But today, after only fourteen hours' sleep, he appeared even more sluggish than ever. As he applied the lather to his customer's beard his brush lingered haltingly, as though loath to leave the stubby chin to which it was being applied.

His customer was a patient man and stood this for a considerable while. But at last his patience began to ooze, and he interrupted a forty winks' interval with a cough.

"S'ere, lad," he suggested, "Aa've an idea. Hold your hand, keep tha brush still, an' aa'll wag ma head for ye!"—London Answers.

Making Things Hum In Rome.

The Romans had three recognized methods of applauding—the bombus, the imbrices and the testae. The word bombus did not carry any allusion to explosives. On the contrary, this form of applause was the most decorous, inasmuch as it consisted merely of a humming or buzzing noise. Thus in a way the Romans were the first "to make things hum" in a public assembly. The bombus was not the chief feature the Romans had to offer in the way of applause. The imbrices meant a demonstration made with the hollow of the hands. The testae meant the striking together of the flat portions of the hands. From this we may conclude that the Romans clapped, but there is no certainty on this point.—New York Herald.

A Shabby Coat Collar.

Very often the collar of a coat begins to look shabby when the coat itself is in good order, and it is wonderful what a difference a thorough cleaning will make. First take a piece of clean cloth and dip it in spirits of turpentine and rub the collar thoroughly with it. Leave it for ten minutes, then rub it again with the turpentine and scrape it carefully to remove any loose dirt. Next sponge the collar with a little alcohol and keep wiping it until it is dry. Hang it up in an airy place for an hour or two and it will look as good as new.—Boston Herald.

How It Was.

"She's very wealthy?"

"Very."

"No. She is the author of a book entitled 'Hints to Beautiful Women.'"

"I presume all the beautiful women in the country purchased it?"

"No; but all the plain women did!"—New York Herald.

A Rite and a Wrong.

"Marriage," remarked the professor, "was a rite practiced by the ancients"—

"And bachelorhood," interrupted a maiden of forty, "is a wrong practiced by the modern."—Boston Transcript.

Mixed.

"Why, Harkins, where have you been? You look like a wreck."

"I know it. My twin brother and I had a quarrel, and I hired a bruiser to lick him. The fellow mixed us up, and here I am."—London Tit-Bits.

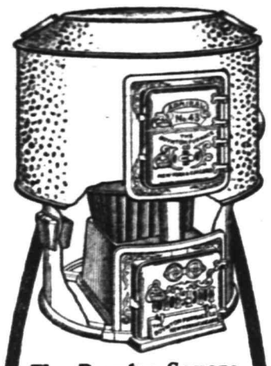
Conceited.

"There are a lot of girls who don't ever intend to get married."

"How do you know?"

"I've proposed to several."—Cleveland Leader.

It is happiness to be nobly descended; it is not less to have so much more it that nobody inquires whether we are so or not.—La Bruyere.



The Boynton Square Fire Pot Never Clogs With Ashes

A WELSH JAWBREAKER.

The Great Big Name of a Charming Little Village.

Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerychwyrndrobwllllandysiliogogogoch is a charming little village in Anglesey, Wales, and a favorite visiting place for tourists. There are many other charming little villages in Wales—all over the world, in fact, but none with a name like that. Llanfairpw., etc., means "the Church of St. Mary in a hollow of white hazel near to the rapid whirlpool and to the Church of St. Tysilio by the red cave."

It is declared that only a Welshman can pronounce the name of the village, but there is no harm in you trying if you wish. The first syllable, "Llan," is very simple. You must double back your tongue along the roof of your mouth and get ready to say something that sounds halfway between "clan" and "thlan," and there you've got it. The second syllable, "fair," is encouragingly simple. And if you want to go on and learn the whole name of the village the following rhyme may be of assistance:

At first it began fair,
Commencing with Llanfair,
Then started a jingle
By adding Pwllgwyngyll,
But was horrible, very,
To stick on Gogery
And simply ignoble
To run to Chwyrndrobwll,
Till it almost will kill you
To say Llandysilio,
With a terrible shock
At the end Gogogoch.

The inhabitants of the village and the postoffice authorities have shortened the name to Llanfair, P. G., while the railroad limits it to Llanfair.—New York World.

THE GOLDEN CAT.

Legend of the Founding of a Persian College at Meshed.

The following story from the Persian manuscript of which a translation has been published under the title "The Glory of the Shia World," reads like a passage in the "Arabian Nights." It tells of a Persian at Meshed who had founded a college with wealth gained in a remarkable manner:

"One day a rich merchant asked him whether he was willing to work at a place to which he would be conducted blindfolded. Being a fearless Kermani and very poor, he agreed, and was led through many streets to a courtyard, where the bandage was removed, and he was ordered to dig a hole and bury gold coins and jewelry. This he did for several days, and, being searched before he left, he saw no chance of bettering his condition.

"However, one day he saw a cat, which he killed and ripped open. He then sewed up some money and jewels inside it and threw it over the wall. After this, when his work was done, he wandered about until he found the cat and not only secured the money hidden in its body, but also learned the position of the house.

"Its owner shortly afterward died, and the astute Kermani bought his house with the gold sewed up inside the cat. As the merchant had never revealed his secret to any one he became his heir and, in turn, when dying, bequeathed his money for the pious task of founding and maintaining a college."

Correct Way to Roll Umbrella.

A badly rolled up umbrella, besides looking unsightly, does not wear half as long as it ought to. The process of rolling an umbrella is very simply. The majority hold it by the handle and keep twisting the stick with one hand, while with the other they twist and roll the silk. Instead of this they should take hold of the umbrella just above the ribs of the cover. These points naturally lie evenly with the stick. They should be kept hold of and pressed tightly against the stock and then the cover should be rolled up. Holding the ribs thus prevents them from getting twisted out of place or bending out of shape, and the silk is bound to follow evenly and roll smooth and tight. If an umbrella is rolled in this fashion it will look as if newly bought for a long time.—Boston Herald.

A Bible Library.

Probably the finest collection of Bibles in the world is that in the library of the General Theological seminary in Chelsea square, New York. In the fireproof Bible room on the second floor are more than 1,200 different editions of the Bible, in all about 2,500 volumes, arranged on shelves and in glass cases. Of these 555 editions are in Latin, making 1,053 volumes. Of "polyglot" editions—in more than one language—there are 93, in 500 volumes. The most interesting of the Bibles is the Gutenberg volume, printed at Moguntia between 1450 and 1455 by Johannes Gutenberg, which has always ranked as a masterpiece of art.

Timber and Lumber.

"Paw, is there any difference between timber and lumber?"

"There is no necessary difference in kind, my son. They differ merely in degree or stage of development. For example, a man may be spoken of as good timber for some high office and yet represent nothing but lumber when he gets there."—Chicago Tribune.

[illegible] Weakness.

Wigg—[illegible] friend the actor seems rather eccentric. Wagg—He's the personification of eccentricity. Why, that man actually admits there are other actors just as good as he is.—Philadelphia Record.

A word of kindness is seldom spoken in vain. It is a seed which, even when dropped by chance, springs up a flower.

A Desperate Game

By JOHN K. LEYS,

Author of "The Lindsays," "The Lawyer's Secret," "The Black Terror," Etc.

Copyright, 1903, by John K. Leys.

"Do. I think that would be a very good plan," said Nora quietly, and she glanced around to see whether there was a constable in sight. Virginie took her driver and was at the door of the brougham as soon as Virginie alighted.

The French woman was considerably surprised to encounter her a second time and gave her a look before which most girls would have quailed.

"There is a constable just coming round the corner. I saw him as we passed," said Nora in a low, earnest voice, "and I shall certainly appeal to him. I must know what has become of Eva—of Miss Fitzgerald, I mean."

"I tell you I know nothing of her!" cried Virginie, her black eyes flashing and her thin red lips tightly compressed.

"I don't believe you. I can't believe you," said Nora. "You and she went away together, and she never met Mr. Lorimer, as she intended doing. Why didn't she come back? Where is she now?"

"How should I know? I tell you I know nothing about her, nothing at all!"

"Then I must appeal to the policeman."

One or two errand boys, attracted by the dispute, were loitering near, and they were soon joined by a couple of men. The policeman was advancing toward them very slowly, apparently trying to make up his mind whether he should tell the two ladies to move on or leave them alone.

At that moment the house door opened, and a short, rather stout man, wearing a very open waistcoat and an enormous tie, descended the steps.

"Ze street is not ze place for conversation nor for disputing, my dear ladies. Will it please you to step inside and say what you have got to say quietly? Julie, I am surprised at you. Diss way, mademoiselle." And he politely moved aside, with a bow, to make way for Nora.

She was only too glad to escape from the publicity of the street and ascended the steps side by side with Virginie, the gentleman bringing up the rear. The first thing that struck her after she had crossed the threshold was a heavy smell of stale cigar smoke. The second thing she noticed was that the furniture of the hall and stairs seemed to be oddly assorted, a queer mixture of meanness and shabby magnificence. There was something about the aspect of the house that was not at all reassuring.

She had reached the foot of the stairs leading to the upper floors when she turned round, intending to go straight out of the house, but Virginie and the Frenchman blocked the way, and just as she was asking them to stand on one side a voice was heard on the landing above asking what was the matter.

The stout Frenchman gave a start, and, pretending to be alarmed, he suddenly opened a door on his right hand, the door of a room looking to the back of the house, and beckoned to Nora to go in.

She shook her head, and then with one rapid movement he placed himself on the other side of her and gave her a violent shove. The result was that she staggered and nearly fell against the open door. Another push drove her right into the room, and the instant she was fairly inside he shut the door and locked it. Nora recovered herself in a moment and rapped on the panels with her knuckles.

"Let me go!" she screamed. "How dare you keep me here against my will? Let me go, and I promise you that I will leave the house at once."

But a silence had fallen outside. There was neither any sound of footstep nor any answering voice.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

NORA TURNS THE TABLES.

The room into which Nora had been thrust was a small one looking toward the back of the house. The carpet was old and ragged, but the chairs and couch were upholstered in leather and richly carved, though sadly in need of polishing. The window, which was extremely dirty, looked out upon a small paved yard.

"They cannot mean to keep me here against my will," said Nora to herself. "Why should they? Why should not that woman tell me what has become of Miss Eva?"

And then a new thought struck her, a thought so dreadful that she sank down upon the nearest seat, white and trembling.

The stolen jewels!

Virginie must have stolen them and taken advantage of Eva's elopement to cover her flight! Then, most likely, she thought to herself, Eva had found out what had been done and had insisted that they should be restored, and then to silence her— What might not this French woman and her accomplices have done? They might have murdered her or shut her up somewhere so that she might not be able to give information to the police. She might even be in that house!

Nora sprang to her feet, still pale, still trembling, but inspired with a new courage. She was determined that she should know the truth about Eva.

advantage of the girl's attention being diverted. She glanced at the coachman, who had been an amused spectator of the scene, and having made him understand that he was to be ready to dash forward as soon as she was within the carriage, she suddenly twisted her arm free, sprang into the brougham and closed the door. That instant the coachman whipped up his horse and the brougham set off at a rapid pace.

Nora looked after the carriage in dismay, but before it had covered twenty yards a hansom driver who had been looking on moved his horse up to her.

"Want to follow that carriage, miss? Here y'are!"

He pointed with the butt end of his whip to the door of his vehicle, and Nora accepted without a word.

Twenty minutes later the brougham stopped at the door of a good sized house in Bayswater, and the hansom stopped, too, a few yards behind it. Nora had her purse ready. She paid The door was thrown open, and a man came in. He looked at Nora out of a pair of shifty black eyes and said politely, "Won't you sit down?"

She sat down and tried hard to appear quite composed.

"I understand," he went on, "that you wish to obtain the address of Miss Fitzgerald?"

"I am determined to find her," said Nora.

"Precisely. I shall be happy to render you every assistance in my power, and so, you may be sure, will Virginie—Mlle. Laroux, I mean. When she left Miss Fitzgerald's service—that was about two months ago—she was staying in London. If you like I will send to the address and ascertain whether Miss Fitzgerald is still there."

Nothing could sound fairer, more polite, and Nora murmured some conventional words of thanks. But she had no faith whatever in the man or his promises. She merely said: "Thank you very much. May I wait until the messenger returns?"

"Oh, certainly," said the tall man, and with a bow and a smile he turned to leave the room.

"One moment, please," said Nora. "That door was locked when I tried it just now. I presume you do not mean to keep me here a prisoner?"

"My dear madam! Nothing could be further from my thoughts!"

He bent down and pretended to examine the lock of the door, then, raising his head, said with the utmost composure:

"I see there is something the matter with the catch. The door will only fasten when it is locked. But if you wish anything you have only to ring the bell, and you will be attended to at once." And with that he was gone.

An hour passed, then a second. It was getting dark, and Nora was very tired of waiting.

She rang the bell, and the man she had seen before obeyed the summons.

"Has not your messenger returned?" she asked. "It is getting late."

"He has not come back," the man answered gravely, "and it is possible that he may not be back for some time. I told him that if Miss Fitzgerald was not there he must find out where she had gone and follow her. I trust I did right."

"Oh, of course," said Nora, her heart beating fast with alarm. She was certain now that the fellow was only playing with her.

"I ought to have been home before this," she said, as though speaking to herself.

"If you like to give me your address I will send and inform your friends that you are in safety." Nora thought there was something of amusement as well as of malice in the smile with which this was said.

"Can I not go home and return tomorrow and learn from you what your messenger has discovered?"

The tall man seemed to hesitate for a moment, then he abruptly shook his head. "That would not be convenient," he answered shortly, and the girl understood him.

"May I go out and post a letter, then?" she asked, resolved to make the villain admit that he was keeping her there a prisoner.

"I am going out shortly, and I shall be delighted to post your letter for you," he returned. "And in the meantime I will take the liberty of sending you up some tea. I am sure you must be hungry." With which he departed, locking the door behind him.

Some minutes passed, and then the door opened and a young woman appeared bearing a tray with some tea, slices of cold meat, bread, butter and cake. She was followed by the tall man she had already seen, and he carried an inkstand and writing materials.

"I thought you might like to write a letter after tea," the man said, with a smile, and, laying the inkstand and paper on a side table, he left the room.

Her meal finished, Nora sat down to write at the side table. She did not for a moment believe that her letter would find its way to the post office. Almost certainly it would be opened and read, then destroyed. But there was always a chance that it might be posted, so Nora wrote to Lady Roscommon, simply saying that she had come by chance upon Virginie, who was staying at — Cleveland terrace, Bayswater. She had noticed the name of the terrace on the corner house as her hansom turned into the street, but she did not know the number.

Just as she finished addressing the envelope the door opened, and the maid came in.

"Let me see; this is No. 16, isn't it?" said Nora, pausing with the pen in her hand.

"No. 9, miss. Oh, law, if I haven't been and forgot already!" she added in a low, awestruck voice.

"What is the matter?" asked Nora, trying to smile.

The girl shook her head vigorously,

"You have been forbidden to speak to me?"

She nodded.

"Well, you needn't. But if you will post a letter for me I will give you a sovereign."

The girl's expression changed to one of absolute terror. She snatched up the tray and ran with it out of the room. A minute later Nora heard a faint click that told her that the door had been locked. It was plain that the servant maid was completely under the domination of her employers. No help was to be looked for in that direction. However, Nora rang the bell and, on the door being opened, without a word handed the girl the letter she had written to Lady Roscommon. She knew that it would be opened and read, and she had taken good care, therefore, to say not a word about the jewels. But she thought that her accepting the offer that had been made to post a letter for her might possibly tend to allay suspicions.

The evening passed very drearily. There was gas in the room, and a box of matches, so when it got dark Nora lit the gas, and that made it seem a trifle less dreary. Then it occurred to her that it might be well to have a second letter ready written and addressed in case an unexpected opportunity of sending it to the post should occur. To whom should she write it?

It would take three days for Lord Roscommon to arrive from Ireland, and she must get aid if possible from some one in London. There was Captain Fitzgerald. She knew his regimental address. A letter sent there would be sure to find him.

She wrote to the captain, giving him a short summary of all that had happened—her accidental meeting with Virginie, her following the former maid home, her forcible detention, her suspicions that Virginie might know something of the stolen jewels. She put the letter into one of the square envelopes that had been supplied to her and addressed it. Now she felt ready for any chance that might turn up.

It was about 9 o'clock, as near as she could judge, when the maid appeared bearing a tray with a cup of chocolate and some bread and butter. On the tray was a letter, ready addressed and stamped for posting.

Nora guessed that it had been at that moment handed to the maid with instructions to post at once, and in that bare second of time, while the girl was laying the tray on the table, she had an inspiration.

"Is that chocolate? Oh, I'm very fond of chocolate!" she cried, and reaching hastily for the cup she managed to spill about half the contents over the letter.

"Oh, miss, whatever have ye done now?" cried the girl, nearly bursting into tears. "They'll be down on me cruel for that!" she exclaimed in a half whisper.

"Never mind. Don't cry. I can easily address a fresh envelope for you, and no one will be any the wiser. Just hold the stamp over the hot water jug for a moment, and it will come off, and we can stick it on the fresh envelope."

As she spoke she tore off the spoiled envelope and, turning to the side table, pretended to copy the address on a clean one, but instead of doing so she addressed it to Captain Fitzgerald, and when the maid turned round to her with the detached postage stamp on the tip of her finger she had the two letters, the one she had taken out of the spoiled envelope and her own both inclosed in the fresh one addressed to Terence.

In another second or two the stamp was affixed, and the maid had left the room, locking the door behind her. Nora could not help trembling a little as she thought of the possible consequences if her trick were discovered. When half an hour had gone by and she was still left undisturbed she felt secure, and, curling herself up on the couch, she tried to get a little sleep. But sleep would not come to her. She could not help believing that she had stumbled into a den of thieves who would commit any crime to secure their own safety.

Toward morning, however, she fell asleep, and about 9 she was awakened by the loud clanging of a bell.

It sounded in a passage not far off. Nora sprang to her feet and held her hands to her beating heart as she listened breathlessly to a second peal from the bell. All remained as silent as before.

Nora knew that her door was locked and that she could do nothing, but to make sure she tried the handle. Yes, the door was locked. Had the people of the house gone away, leaving her shut up there? She beat upon the door with her fists, screaming as she did so.

But the noise she made was drowned under the louder noise of a fierce hail of blows which now descended on the door, apparently struck with a stick wielded by a strong arm. She waited till the blows stopped and then struck the door again and screamed, then listened anxiously. An answering shout came to her. She could not hear what was said, but it was enough. She had been heard. She was saved!

Five minutes later she was sobbing in the arms of her lover. Not until that moment did she know how great had been the strain on brain and nerves of the last twelve hours. Never until then did she realize how much she loved the man on whose breast she was lying. For the moment her promise to Lady Roscommon was forgotten. She only knew that she was safe—safe and happy, with a happiness she had never known before.

"So you got my letter?" Nora whispered, raising her blushing face to his.

COUNCIL MAY NAME CORPORATION COUNSEL

The passage of Senate Bill, No. 51, introduced by Senator Bradley, of Camden, which has been signed by the Governor, and is therefore a law, takes out of the hands of Mayor G. W. V. Moy the appointment of an overseer of the poor and a corporation counsel, it is claimed. The new law is one revising the title of an act passed in 1904, which was believed to be faulty hence the amendment to make the act constitutional. Lawyers declared here today that the act applies to Plainfield, notwithstanding a rumor that there was question on this point as Plainfield is working under a special charter.

The Common Council is now amending a city ordinance, which will remove the restriction compelling that the corporation counsel shall be a resident of Plainfield and a practicing lawyed in this city. By making this amendment it would give the Mayor the right to appoint a corporation counsel not a practicing lawyer in Plainfield. It remains to be seen whether the Common Council will take advantage of the new law. When questioned on the matter today, Mayor Moy said that he had not heard of the new law and was not in a position to discuss the matter.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

The first and second acts of "The Spendthrift," to be produced at the Plainfield theatre tomorrow night, are laid in the drawing room of a town house on Riverside Drive, New York. The first scene is in the afternoon. One would expect to see a ray of sunshine coming across the Hudson from over the Palisades, but Mr. Thompson insisted upon having at least three rays on account of the trees in Riverside Park casting a certain amount of shade. The second scene is in the evening and one sees the lights along Riverside Drive twinkling outside the windows as well as the moon shining on the trees. Those are but two of the many instances of stage realism in this play.

A REAL AUTOMOBILE SENSATION

Following the sensational announcement that the E-M-F Company, of Detroit, was offering a fore-door, three-speed, five-passenger Flanders "20" for $800, comes the second statement from this progressive concern that a full vestibuled, five-passenger E-M-F "30" touring car will be sold for $1,100.

It seems to be "second nature" with the E-M-F Company to furnish the industry and trade with surprises—surprises that come when most unexpected and at a season of the year when new things are not looked for.

By building a Flanders "20" fore-door, three-speed car at $800 and an E-M-F "30" full vestibuled at $1,100 the company has now a line of high quality cars at lowest prices that cannot be overlooked by buyers of medium priced machines.

In announcing the E-M-F "30" vestibuled touring car, the company has undoubtedly given the public an automobile that in uniformity of body-conformation, grace of line, and distinguished appearance, is another triumph for this organization. The E-M-F "30" vestibuled body is built on clean cut, straight, pleasing and original lines.

The new body is mounted on the standard E-M-F "30" chassis which has given such universal satisfaction. The four cylinder motor has a piston displacement of 226 cubic inches. The three speed selective transmission is of the type used on all high grade cars. The cone clutch is leather-faced, while the dual system of dry cells and megneto furnish the ignition.

The E-M-F "30" vestibuled body is designed to carry out the most beautiful and effective ideas of fore-door construction. In the dash has been built adjustable ventilators, giving free circulation of air in summer, or closed for warmth in winter. The dash is of the semi-torpedo design and harmonizes with the wide sweeping lines of the fenders and the graceful body lines. The body is made of alumniod steel with wood trimmings. Like all high class cars the doors are fitted with invisible sliding handles of latest design.

A LETTER FROM ONE OF THE STOCKHOLDERS

NATIONAL MINING —AND— LEASING COMPANY

Plainfield, N. J., Dec. 30, 1910.

The National Mining and Leasing Co.,
Plainfield, N. J.

Gentlemen:

Answering your favor regarding my shares in your Company would say that I hold Certificate No. 29, which you will see from the number is among your earliest issues. I am highly pleased with my investment and have received forty-five [45] dividends to Dec. 1, 1910, which amounts to nearly twice what the shares cost me. I would not care to sell my shares for less than ten [10] times the amount I paid for them, and I am sorry I did not secure more of the shares, when I had the opportunity, at the same price.

I believe that the above expresses my opinion of your valuable proposition. I am

Signed---FRED J. BREWER.

The above letter is furnished to us to be published or used otherwise as a reference

Mrs. L. C. Van Nest spent yesterday with friends in Irvington.

Mr. and Mrs. Rupert J. Thomas, of West Fifth street, are entertaining relatives from Port Jefferson, L. I.

Mrs. Harry Davison, of Laramie road, who underwent an operation at Muhlenberg Hospital, yesterday, is reported as doing well.

Mr. and Mrs. William Weigand, of the Warrenville road, Watchung, are the parents of a daughter, who arrived at their home Friday.

Harry Rosenberg, the popular drum artist, of Proctor's theatre, who has been doing the circuit for Proctor and Sanderson since last November, returned this morning to resume his work at Proctor's, on West Front street.

Dr. E. W. Hedges, of Watchung avenue, has returned from a trip to Rochester, Minn., where he visited St. Mary's College, which is conducted by the Mayo Brothers. Dr. Hedges was one of a party of physicians to make the trip.

The Martine avenue baseball team played the Laramie Park team, Saturday, defeating the latter nine by a score of 21 to 9.

The Ladies' Christian Work Society of Trinity Reformed church, held a social at the church Friday afternoon, there being thirty-four members present to enjoy a rather novel informal program. In honor of St. Patrick's Day each member wore a decoration appropriate to the day and the color green was evidenced in many ways not only in the decorations, but in the refreshmen's. The women brought their work with them and spent a profitable, as well as sociable time together.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Netherwood Reformed church held a successful cake and bread sale on Saturday afternoon from 2 o'clock until 5. The offerings were all disposed of and a neat sum turned into the treasury of the society.

WORK OF COUNCIL

PETITIONS ARE NUMEROUS.

There being some doubt in the minds of the members as to whether the Common Council has the right to appropriate $100 or any sum to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., for Memorial Day purposes, that body at its adjourned meeting last night, held up a resolution offered by Councilman Mygatt and the committee on laws and ordinances will investigate.

The question was raised by Councilman George S. Clay, who was not perfectly sure of the matter, and although it has been the custom to make this appropriation annually, it was thought best to inquire more fully into the matter. It will probably be reported upon at the meeting to be held next Monday night.

The Council received an invitation from Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R. to attend the exercises in Reformed Hall, Memorial Day, which will be the fiftieth observance of the occasion and it was filed.

In the absence of President R. I. Tolles and City Clerk J. T. MacMurray, Councilman Buxton, as chairman of the finance committee, called the meeting to order and was afterward made president pro tem.

A copy of the resolution adopted by the Borough Council, endorsing the action of the city body in refusing to renew Christian Gloekler's liquor license and recommending that Somerset street at that point be widened and otherwise improved, was received and filed.

According to the action of the Plainfield Ministers' Association at its recent meeting adopting resolutions endorsing the action of the Council in reference to refusing Christian Gloekler a liquor license, a copy of the resolutions were presented to the Council by Rev. Dr. C. E. Herring, secretary, and Rev. Dr. C. M. Anderson, of the First M. E. church, both of whom were present. The resolution, which was signed by Rev. J. Y. Broek, president and Dr. Herring, secretary, were filed.

Cormick McDonough, who is building six new houses on St. Mary's avenue, west of Hill street, petitioned for an eight inch sewer, and the matter was referred, as was also a petition from G. D. Merkle and others asking for four electric lights near George street and Summer avenue.

George E. Sovereign protested against the proposed extension of Kensington avenue according to the present plans and P. J. McDonough petitioned for the improvement of Rose street at its intersection with Randolph road, which he claimed was flooded in heavy rains and likely to breed disease. The Central Park Realty Company also petitioned against the extension of Kensington avenue, especially if it was to be assessed for the improvement. These matters were referred to the proper committees.

Councilman Mygatt submitted an opinion from Judge William Newcorn in the matter of W. A. Coddington, trustee, for C. M. Meeker, on the contract between the latter and the city, stating that the final releases had been secured and there was nothing to hinder the city from paying the amount of the bill, $1,367.24, provided it was found to be correct. On motion of Mr. Mygatt the opinion was filed and the bill referred to the auditing committee.

In accordance with a resolution by Mr. Gloak, which was adopted, contracts for furnishing crushed stone for the year were awarded to N. B. Smalley, the Wilson Stone Company and the Watchung Stone Company, bidding jointly; also to the Watchung Stone Company for furnishing crosswalks and culverts.

The Mayor and clerk were authorized to sign a contract on behalf of the city with the P. S. C., to supply electric current for the switch board at fire headquarters, in accordance with a resolution by Mr. Taylor, and another resolution by the same member, which was adopted, awarded the contract to the Consumers' Coal Company for supplying 200 tons of coal at $5.30 per ton, 1,000 bags of oats, 50 tons of hay and 25 tons of straw for the fire department, the company's bid being the lowest.

Resolutions offered by Mr. Taylor were adopted as follows: Authorizing the installation of a fire-alarm box at Park avenue and Randolph road; also the installation of one two-way hydrant on West Sixth street, near Clinton avenue.

Mr. Montgomery offered a resolution, which was adopted, appropriating $300 for placing a bath-room in the alms house. Mr. Gloak called up on third reading the ordinance to establish grades in certain streets; also the one extending West Fifth and West Sixth streets from Monroe avenue to Clinton avenue, and they were adopted.

LILLIAN RUSSELL IN SEARCH OF A SINNER

Lillian Russell is coming to the Plainfield theatre next Tuesday night in her newest vehicle "In Search of a Sinner," a comedy in three acts by Charlotte Thompson. The Chicago critics, who passed the first judgment upon Miss Russell's latest venture, were unanimous in the expression that it is the best thing the fair Lillian has appeared in in the five seasons she has been playing straight comedy.

Jospeh Brooks is presenting Miss Russell this season in the largest production he has ever made for her. Her supporting company is evenly balanced and includes Harry C. Browne, Joseph Tuchy, Hattie Russell, Jessie Ralph, Alfred Hudson, Jr., Lynn Pratt, John C. Brammall, Edward Warren, Victor Benoit, Daniel Fitzgerald, Elsie Scott and Ruby Ross.

GEORGE S. CLAY TO WED MISS WASHINGTON

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Mary Welby Washington, daughter of Col. and Mrs. John M. Washington, of Fauquier county, Virginia, and Councilman George S. Clay, of East Seventh street. The wedding, which will be attended only by members of the immediate families, will take place on Wednesday, April 19, at the home of Miss Washington's sister, Mrs. Chas. E. Piper, of West Peachtree street, Atlanta, G. No friends from this city are expected to attend.

Miss Washington has many friends in this city, where she has visited frequently. The family is one of the best known in Virginia. Mr. Clay, who was formerly associated with the late Judge Dillion, of New York, in the practice of law, is now located at 195 Broadway, New York, where he has law offices. Mr. Clay is a vestryman of Grace church. He is also an officer of the Plainfield Country Club, and an active golfer. Serving his second term as a member of the Common Council he takes a deep interest in city affairs and is admittedly a model city father.

Following the wedding the couple will reside on East Seventh street.

ALLEGED MAYHEW HAD FLEECED THEM

Representing himself as the traveling agent of the American Hatchery Company of Plainfield, W. E. Mayhew, was arrested on a trolley car between Springfield and Elizabeth, last night. County Detective Brennan, of Morris, and Police Chief O'Neill, of Westfield, took him into custody on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences. He was lodged in the jail at Morristown.

Mayhew, the police say, claims Plainfield as his home and for the last two months has been lodging at Willett's hotel, Westfield. It is alleged that he represented to farmers in Morris and Union counties that they could have eggs hatched at the alleged hatchery here at a nominal charge by contributing the eggs and ten per cent. of the charge. Farmers complained that they never received the promised chicks. Proprietor Willett, of the Westfield hotel, says Mayhew owes him a $70 board bill.

No one here seems to know much of Mayhew, so far as can be learned and where the alleged hatchery is is a mystery.

Mayhew is described as being thirty years of age and a dapper dresser. It is said that he tried to get the local hatchery but the negotiations failed. He formerly worked at a poultry farm on the Mountain avenue road.

Fred Kline's Mishap.

Fred Kline, a young son of William Kline, sergeant-at-arms at the Council Chamber, was removed to Muhlenberg Hospital, yesterday by Dr. J. F. Lawson, for treatment of a severe burn of the arm several weeks ago. The lad fell on a stove, burning the fore-arm and medical attention was not secured at first. Recently, the arm swelled to unusual size and a physician was summoned. He found the wound infected and had the victim taken to the hospital. Dr. Lawson believes that the arm can be saved.

P. S. C. Improvement.

The Public Service Corporation which is replacing worn out rails with new ones on West Front street, expects to continue the improvement as far as Jefferson avenue. The company's application for a "Y" at West Front street and Grant avenue, has not been acted upon as yet by the Common Council.

CONVENTION PLANS

General Committee Named to Arrange for State Sunday School Gathering.

E. W. DUNHAM'S ADDRESS.

Another enthusiastic meeting of the Sunday-school workers of this city was held last evening in the Sunday-school room of the First Baptist church. It was the first general meeting of the committees selected last month and was attended by a large number of workers in the Sunday-schools of this city. Arthur M. Harris, chairman of the general committee of arrangements, presided. A short devotional service was followed the opening of the meeting, and immediately afterwards Mr. Harris announced that the invitation of the Ministers' Association to hold the annual State convention in this city had been accepted and announced the purpose of last evening's meeting to be for the making of preliminary arrangements for entertaining the delegates to the convention. William D. Murray, chairman of the nominating committee presented the names of the general committee of arrangements, which will be found below.

Mr. Harris introduced Edward W. Dunham, treasurer of the State Sunday-school Association, who gave an address outlining what would be expected from Plainfield in the coming convention. Mr. Dunham said he hoped that the 1911 convention in Plainfield would be of such a high character as to its various parts, that when the next year's assembly convened in Trenton they would have a standard to look up to which would make it the most memorable the State had ever known.

Mr. Dunham complimented this city upon its record as a convention city and stated that the State Executive committee was confident that the coming convention would be the best of those of the fifty-three years of the organization's existance. He said that $500 would be needed to meet the necessary expenses of the convention, but did not think that it would be burdensome on this community when distributed among so many fine schools. The necessity for publicity was emphasized and the newspapers of the city were warmly eulogized for their unusual amount of space given to religious matters.

When the speaker had concluded Mr. Harris remarked with some emphases that the religious news printed in the local papers was complimentary of both editors and said that this fact was often the subject of conversation between him and visitors at his home who read the accounts of services in local churches. The chairman asked the hearty co-operation of all those present to make the coming convention the success it deserved to be.

The general committee:

Mayor Moy Makes Another Appointment for Overseer-of-the-Poor.

TABLED BY CITY FATHERS.

Mayor G. W. V. Moy sent in to the Common Council last night, his appointment of Joseph Sattels as overseer-of-the-poor to succeed Alexander Ayers. On motion of Councilman F. L. Montgomery, chairman of the alms committee, the appointment was laid on the table without comment. It is reported that the councilmen will consider it in executive session at an early date. Mr. Sattels was at one time associated with Andrew Vanderbeek when the latter was overseer-of-the-poor.

Soon after Mr. Moy went into office he appointed Rev. F. St. John Fitch, a retired Baptist clergyman as overseer-of-the-poor, but after holding up the appointment for several weeks, the Council finally turned him down, making another appointment necessary.

After due consideration, Mr. Moy decided to submit the name of Joseph Sattels, who, he believes, is well qualified for the position. He says that being associated with the late Mr. Vanderbeek he had great advantage in learing the duties of the office, and besides he has sufficient time outside of his own business to properly attend to the work. As the Council will meet again next Monday night, it is possible that some action may be taken at that time.

IBSEN NOT PROPHET OF THE 19TH CENTURY

Instead of the lecture on "The Social Aspect of the Ibsen Drama," by Stockton Axson, of Princeton University, scheduled for yesterday's program at the meeting of the Monday Afternoon Club, a discourse on "The Development of Ibsen's Ideas and Their Relation to Modern Life" was given by Christian Gauss, also a professor at Princeton University. The illness of Mr. Axson necessitated the change of program.

Mr. Gauss in the opening of his lecture stated that Ibsen was considered by some the prophet of the nineteenth century, but he thought Ibsen was no more, often less, a representative of life than other men. He said Ibsen wrote as a stranger, he came from a country which has had no representative in literature until recent years, that Norway is a country poor and uncomfortable, a land of gloom with short summers that require haste in harvesting and the Norwegian he described as dreamy and waiting for the miracle to happen. Ibsen's attitude toward life he considered resentful and distinctly unsocial, with an interest that was feverish and not healthy.

Mr. Gauss quoted from Ibsen's dramas to prove that without joy in living, the preaching of idealism is utterly idle. The lecture referred to Ibsen's reputation for scientific theories, but said a great deal of his work in this line was remnants, picking up scientific facts that suited him and that often his conclusions were contradictory and debatable.

Mr. Gauss disputed Ibsen's theories of democracy. Ibsen says, "The majority are never in a position to see a truth," but while Mr. Gauss admits they may not be in a position to discover a truth, the majority do see it when it is showed up. Suffrage was not given, he said, that the president should be a better man merely, but that the people who voted for the president should be a better people. Woman suffrage, he thought, might make more responsible women. Ibsen's version of idealism and symbolism were touched upon by the speaker, who said in conclusion that Ibsen did perform a useful service in the nineteenth century by showing that it is necessary to adapt our notions and conceptions of life to the changes that have come with the years and remove some of the old mile stones.

The thought of Tolstoi's law unto himself and Ibsen's law unto others concluded the lecture that was full of interest, though its tone was critical, rather than laudatory.

Michael Day.

Michael Day, aged 36 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Day, of Somerset street, died at his home in Brooklyn this morning following an illness of six weeks with pneumonia. Mr. Day, who formerly lived on East Fourth street, has been employed in New York by various large contractors as a bricklayer. He is survived by his parents and four sisters, the Misses Lizzie and Julia Day, of the borough, Mrs. Charles Johnson, of this city, and another married sister living in New York city. The notice of funeral will be given tomorrow.

WORK IN SCHOOLS

What Parent-Teacher Association Has Accomplished in One Year.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS MADE.

A largely attended meeting of the Franklin-Whittier-Stillman Parent-Teacher Association was held in the Franklin school last evening at which the report of the special committee on sanitation was read by Mrs. G. Stuart Simons and an address given by Lindsay Best, principal of the Plainfield High School.

Mrs. Simmon's report contained the following: "A year ago your committee made a report calling attention to the conditions in the schools of our association. During the year many of the items mentioned in that report have been remedied. At the Stillman school new water fountains have been supplied and others of a more approved pattern have been substituted where they were needed; thermometers have been placed in different rooms and a record of temperature taken. At the Whittier school repairs deemed necessary by the committee have been made, a toilet added for the children of the kindergarten and the basements of both schools put in a condition of safety.

"At the Franklin school additional fire-escapes have been erected and the old ones strengthened. Ventilation is improved by a five minute recess during which the children leave the room and windows opened. Playgrounds successfully established and lockers and toilet rooms have been provided, adding much to the convenience of both teachers and pupils. Five representative mothers have visited the schools for the association and they report the ventilation unsatisfactory, many of the rooms overcrowded, prospects for more double classes next fall which the committee deplores.

"The committee has had a number of conferences with Superintendent Henry M. Maxson, at which times suggestions of the committee have been discussed. Dr. Maxson has assured the committee that the Board of Education has most of these matters under consideration and will doubtless make marked improvements during the summer months. The committee recommends that the members of the association post themselves on up-to-date methods in the best schools and thereby be of assistance to the board in future work."

Principal Best talked for half an hour in an interesting way about the individual child. First he spoke of the differences between children, physically and mentally. He suggested the necessity of different kind of treatment for the education of each kind. The special form of treatment desirable being special institutions for the blind, deaf, feeble minded, etc. He said that special classes were desirable for pupils of peculiar mental and physical make up and said that the classes ought to be divided according to the mental characteristics of the children. In any event the classes ought to be smaller. The address was much appreciated by the people present.

On April 12 Mrs. V. Scott, supported by the Philadelphia North American, will give an illustration in domestic science, especially cooking at the Stillman School. She will illustrate the best methods of instructing the girls in cooking.

MAYOR REFUSES TO SIGN WARRANT.

Although Judge William Newcorn furnished the Common Council with an opinion, last night, in the matter of the claim of C. M. Meeker against the city, in which W. A. Coddington is acting as trustee for the several creditors of Mr. Meeker, advising the Council that there was nothing in the way of paying the claim, if found to be correct, Mayor G. W. V. Moy today refused to sign the warrant in payment of the claim.

The Mayor is not satisfied with the papers furnished to him, claiming that there is nothing to show that the various creditors, represented by Judge Coddington as trustee, have released the city from any future claim.

GESANG AND TURN VEREIN INSTALLS ITS OFFICERS.

At a meeting in Saengerbund Hall last night, the recently elected officers were installed as follows: President, Stephen H. Schlief; vice-president, E. Renz; recording secretary, John Koenig; financial secretary, August Wolf; treasurer, Fred Becker.

Following the ceremony, addresses were made by the officers and a general social time was enjoyed. The singing section gave several selections while the young folks were given a short period of dancing. Supper was served in conclusion.

HORSES BEATEN BY TWO DRUNKEN MEN

For being drunk and cruelly beating a team of horses on East Front street yesterday afternoon, Charles Meshon, aged thirty-five years and Warren McCauley, aged thirty years, both of Scotch Plains, were held in $100 bonds for trial next Friday morning by Judge William G. DeMeza in the city court this morning.

Complaint was telephoned to police headquarters yesterday afternoon by Mrs. Robert Huntsman, of East Front street, and the men were arrested by Patrolman Vanderweg. Both were drunk when found by the patrolman but this morning they denied beating and kicking the horses. The court ordered a further investigation and witnesses will be subpoenaed. McCauley has a suspended fine of $10 hanging over his head since last November.

EAST END CLUB MAY BUILD A CLUB HOUSE

Plans for erecting a suitable clubhouse, the probable cost and other details, were discussed at the monthly meeting of the Dutch Arms, men's association, of the Netherwood Reformed church, held at the parsonage last night. The association is growing so rapidly that it is the opinion of the members that it would be wise to erect a clubhouse just for club purposes. A committee comprising Amos Andrews, chairman; J. C. Hansen, William Curtis, Clarence Berry and Joseph Olea, was appointed to investigate the matter more fully and report at the meeting to be held April 17.

The association elected three new members last night, and decided to give a supper at the church on Thursday night, April 20. It will be a "ladies' night" affair, and the men propose to make it one of the best in the history of the church.

15TH ANNIVERSARY OF THEIR WEDDING

The fifteenth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. William Carmichael, of Fanwood, was celebrated last night, when a company of about thirty relatives and friends called on the couple giving them a surprise. During the evening there was a fine program of singing and dancing was also enjoyed, the music being furnished by Mr. Carmichael.

Among those who contributed vocal selections were Miss A. McKenzie, Mrs. W. Wilson, Mrs. Robert Baillie, Mrs. J. Donaldson, Mrs. A. Cowley and Messrs. John Donaldson, Peter Neil, William Carmichael, Peter Johnson, John Beattie, Alex. Beattie and James Beattie.

Refreshments were served during an intermission and before the guests departed they left their best wishes for the couple for many happy returns of the day. Mr. and Mrs. Carmichael were married in Paisley, Scotland, March 20, 1896. They have been residents of Fanwood for some time.

FUNERAL SERVICE OF MRS. WM. H. VANWINKLE.

The funeral of Mrs. William H. VanWinkle was held at the late home, Park place, yesterday afternoon, and was largely attended by relatives and friends. There were also many beautiful floral tributes. Rev. Dr. Charles E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, of which Mrs. VanWinkle was a member, officiated.

The burial was in the North Plainfield cemetery and the pall bearers, all cousins, were John H. VanWinkle, Jr., Charles VanWinkle, Edward T. VanWinkle, Jeremiah VanWinkle, Nelson VanWinkle and William Leeker, the last named of Newark.

Trolley and Auto Collide.

Trolley car No. 137, of the Netherwood line, in charge of conductor No. 4758, collided with an automobile driven by Charles Reid, of Westervelt avenue, yesterday afternoon at 5:25 o'clock resulting in several broken parts on the automobile. Mr. Reid alleged to the police that the trolley car was going at a fast clip and that as he started to turn his machine around the motorman was unable to bring his car to a stop in time to avoid the accident.

Suspended Sentence.

Charles Messler, a painter, of Watchung, pleaded guilty to a charge of intoxication this morning before Judge DeMeza and received a suspended sentence. His last appearance in court on a similar charge was on October 8 last, when he was similiarly discharged.

FUND FOR FACTORY

Commerce Committee Support Ends and Citizens Committee Gets to Work.

$15,000 SUBSCRIBED ALREADY.

Julius J. Keller, Sr., representing the Harris Typewriter Company, of Philadelphia, at a special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, last night withdrew the request of the company for the support of the chamber in helping the concern to locate here, and at the same time explained that the company in February last purchased 800 feet of land on South avenue from the Central Land Improvement company.

After the chamber session, a meeting of citizens was called and a committee from that body comprising William Jeffery, chairman; A. E. Force, Jacob Sachar and Arthur E. Smith, was appointed and it will try to raise $35,000 within the next ten days as a means of bringing the typewriter company to Plainfield. It was stated that already $15,000 has been subscribed to the fund.

Those present accepted the opportunity to freely express their opinions, some of which were decidedly personal and led to an open breach. Charles H. Hand expressed his disgust with the whole procedure and said that they could not only count him out of this proposition but any others that the chamber might become interested in at any future time.

J. J. Swan, who is interested in the proposition to bring the company here, spoke in an indignant manner of the treatment accorded Mr. Keller, adding that the whole thing had resolved into a comic opera. Mr. Keller finally decided to withdraw the proposition so far as it related to the chamber. He said that he desired the moral support of the chamber as well as citizens generally.

The representatives of the company present were DeWitt C. Harris, the inventor of the typewriter; Julius Keller, Sr., Julius Keller, Jr., and E. G. Potter, of Philadelphia and J. J. Swan, of this city. These Plainfielders were present in response to 120 special notices sent out by the secretary, Judge John Ulrich:

G. M. Christian, Jacob Sachar, Herman Schwed, Herman Keller, Richard Parrot, C. H. Hand, A. E. Smith, A. E. Force, Milton Mendel, F. A. Duttenhofer, J. J. Finerty, H. N. Holder, William Jeffery and Judge John Ulrich. A meeting of the special committee will be held Saturday afternoon at the chamber rooms.

F. K. STELLE WEDS MISS EDITH LLOYD.

Miss Myrtle Edith Lloyd, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Lloyd, of West Millington, and Frederick K. Stelle, of the same place, were married yesterday afternoon at 2:30 at the home of William H. Bauman, of West Millington. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Thomas A. Moffett, of the First Congregational church, Newark, in the presence of twenty-five relatives and friends, a number of whom were from this city.

Miss Lloyd was attended by Miss Essie Bryan, as bridesmaid, and F. J. Stelle was best man. Following the ceremony, a reception was held during which supper was served. Mr. and Mrs. Stelle left by automobile for a wedding trip. On returning they will reside at West Millington, where the groom has furnished a home and where he is engaged in farming. Both young people are well known locally.

Those from this city who were in attendance were Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Dunning, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Durman and daughters, and Miss Elsie Stelle. Mrs. Dunning and Mrs. Durman are sisters of the groom.

Want Police Protection.

The petition from the Dutch Arms, men's association of the Netherwood Reformed church, asking for better police protection and citing the fact that there were nine burglaries in that section of the city one night recently, called forth comment on the part of Mr. Gloak at the Council meeting last night. He said that it was ridiculous that such a condition should exist. He advocated an increase in the police force, adding that policemen had left the department and no one had been appointed in their places.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

"The Spendthrift," which comes to the Plainfield theatre tonight, is a four-act problem play, its motive an arraignment of the puerile society life, vanity and thirst for riches, which has possessed the souls of many women, and led them in their insuperable selfishness to deny motherhood, to rob their husbands of their mates eternally grinding and toiling under a mountain of debt in order to earn the wherewithal to buy luxuries, pretty things and baubles with which to bedeck empty lives. This theme is developed very skillfully. The lines are epigrammatical, witty and cogent. The argument is vigorous, daring and has the reverential touch the subject calls for. Porter Emerson Browne, the author has conceived very effective characters and drawn them faithfully.

Mrs. William Reeder, of Ashmore avenue, Trenton, has fallen heir to $12,000 and a Colonial homestead in New Egypt, at her grandmother's death.

BASEBALL.

The Netherwood Juniors defeated the Fillmore Avenue team on the grounds at Leland and South avenues, Saturday afternoon by a score of 21 to 8. The game was an exciting one. The lineup of the winning team: Monroe Gullberg, catcher-captain; Owen Horan, pitcher; Edward Fincke, first base, manager; Hamilton Wilmerding, second base; John Frederickson, third base; Ben. Letson, short stop; Robert Wemple, centre field; Kenneth Guttridge, right field; Harry Bowe, left field.

Which will prove to be the better pitcher in fast company? "Lefty" Russell, bought by Connie Mack from Baltimore for the reputed price of $12,500, or Vean Gregg, the Pacific Coast southpaw, whom Cleveland purchased from Spokane in 1909 and turned over to Portland for use in 1910?

It has been several years since two such fulsomely touted southpaws broke into fast company. Russell was the sensation of the Eastern League last season, and he must have had the stuff to back up the reputation he acquired, for Connie Mack is not given to paying fancy prices for never-wuzzers.

On the other hand, no young pitcher ever boasted the achievements that went to the credit of Vean Gregg on the Pacific Coast last season. He was no flash in the pan, for his work in the box was consistently good all season. In fact, he finished far stronger than he started out, many of his sensational strike-out feats being accomplished during the waning days of the season, when Portland was fighting desperately for the pennant.

Joe Lennon, of Orange Valley and Ironside fame, is well satisfied with the terms offered by Manager Hank Ramsey, of Altoona, and will sign a contract to play with the Tri-State club this season. John McNabb, of the Crescent basketball club, and considered one of the best goal shooters in this part of the country, is anxious to break into professional baseball. He has interested Secretary Frank McTague, of the Indians, in his behalf, and McTague has received a flattering offer for McNabb from Manager Frank Shaugnessey, of the Roanoke Virginia League club.

With his entire team in camp, Hal Chase started his men on their last four days' work of the training season yesterday at Athens, Ga. Jim Vaughan, Charley Hemphill, Harry Wolter and Earl Gardner, who have been taking an overdose of the baths at Hot Springs, Va., are due at the camp tonight. Not a complaint is heard of sore arms or aching muscles. Next Friday the team will be split up. Chase will take his regulars on their extended tour of the South and West, playing every day until April 11, when they hit Philadelphia to begin the season on the following day.

Mike Donovan, third baseman and captain of last season's Reading Tri-State ball team, has been traded by Manager Coughlin to the Elmira team, of the New York State League. In exchange, Coughlin gets Thomas Philbin, a catcher, who caught fifty-seven games last esason and had a batting average of .196, while in fielding he had an average of .961. It is said that Catcher Millman, of the Reading team, will not be in the lineup this year, as he is dissatisfied with the salary named in the contract sent him.

In the muddiest kind of a ball field the New York Giants defeated the San Antonio Bronchos at San Antonio, Tex., Sunday afternoon by a score of 2 to 1. The rains had soaked the soft black earth so that the players in the infield mired up to their shoetops. As an illustration of the difficulties in running, Josh Devore, one of the fastest runners in the National League, hit a fly ball over the centre fielder's head and just managed to reach first base.

Rush work started yesterday on the rebuilding of the Washington Baseball Park in order to have the new concrete and steel double-deck stand ready by April 12, the date of the opening game with the Red Sox. A big force of men worked all day yesterday removing the debris from the recent fire. President Johnson, of the American League, attended a meeting of the Washington club directors yesterday to decide upon the size of the new stands and the field.

For the first time since the Phillies arrived at Birmingham, Ala., they were compelled to keep indoors. It rained so hard Sunday morning that no one ventured out. In the afternoon it ceased raining and later the clouds broke and the sun shone brightly. The players are anxious to get away from the training camp, as the work has become monotonous and all are preparing to break camp on Wednesday.

GOLF.

All this low scoring, accomplished chiefly by reason of the remarkable length now obtainable with certain makes of ball, says an English critic, brings the question of standardization much to the fore at present. Many players, as well as a number of good judges of the game, are desirious of having a standard make of ball—if not for general use, at any rate for the big events. "Personally," says the English writer, "I think the idea is impracticable."

In the days of the gutty it could have been adopted, for then the balls were composed of one material, and the question of making was a trifling matter.

But with two or three substances which are nowadays necessary to the manufacture of balls—even without taking into consideration the various methods of winding the rubber thread—it is practically impossible to insist on a standard make.

Moreover, the short or only moderate drivers would immediately be up in arms. There are many really good players who simply cannot get length off their wooden clubs unless they play with certain balls.

They would argue—and perhaps not without reason—that as they are above the average in the short game and on the putting green they should be allowed to play with a ball which, with its longer flight and run, particularly run, enables them to get such distance with their own against a bigger hitter who is always home in two full shots.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

The Young People's Association of the Crescent Avenue church will meet Friday night.

The Sunshine Mission Band of the Crescent Avenue church held its weekly meeting yesterday afternoon.

Members of the Rescue Mission will assist in the prayer meeting at the Temple Baptist church, Wednesday night.

The Mission Study Class of the First M. E. church will conduct the meeting at the Plainfield Rescue Mission on Friday night.

The annual meeting of the Crescent Avenue church will be held the second week in April, at which officers will be elected and reports presented.

The Crescent Avenue church will inaugurate its new system of benevolences on April 1. A few days ago 14 pledges had been handed to the treasurer, the total amount pledged being $6,250, and additional amounts are being promised.

The quartet choir of the Crescent Avenue church, under the direction of Organist Russell, will give its monthly musical service next Sunday evening, when selections from "The Redemption," by Gounod, will be rendered. There will be no organ recital that evening.

Rev. E. S. Randolph, of Philadelphia, son of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. D. B. F. Randolph, of Sandford avenue, has been visiting his parents for a few days. Sunday morning he preached at the First M. E. church.

We WANT COMPETITION of the Right Sort, Not the Following Kind!

A Mrs. S—— after selecting her outfit and learning the total cost from our plainly marked price tags, said she preferred to make comparisons elsewhere before ordering, to which we readily agreed, for it's a thing we always URGE!

On getting another store's prices (where they were marked in private signs) she found ours were far less, and SAID so. The salesman promptly dropped to our figures—AND GOT THE ORDER.

Here, where there's but ONE PLAINLY MARKED PRICE ON EVERY ITEM, such an "accommodating" and sudden price drop would be impossible—here, when you read the price tag, you KNOW it's already at lowest point, for ALL prices are made and REMAIN on the SAME UNIFORMLY SMALL PROFIT BASIS. We don't HAVE to run a "leader" here and there for an hour, or a day, to catch trade, as ALL lines are equally good values EVERY day in the year!

All we want is HONEST competition that meet OUR plainly marked prices WITH prices you can READ!

LIVINGSTON BARBOUR RECITES 'SKY PILOT'

Under the auspices of the Dutch Arms, of Trinity Reformed church last evening Livingston Barbour, professor of oratory at Rutgers College, gave an impersonation of Ralph Conner's "Sky Pilot" before an audience which completely filled the Sunday school rooms.

Professor Barbour gave the interpretation of the novel in four separate parts and held the interest of the big audience from start to finish. He is a most entertaining reader, having the insight into the characters he portrays which enables him to faithfully reproduce the actual scene of the occurrences with lifelike fidelity. The deathbed scene of Bruce, one of the leading characters of the book, brought forth the splendid dramatic ability of the speaker.

CITY IN DIFFICULTY OVER SEPTIC PATENT

Plainfield's sewage disposal plant has been working under a disadvantage, apparently, according to the contract which was made in July, 1904. The system adopted then, under patents controlled by the Cameron Septic Tank Company, of Chicago, seems to be a perpetual one from which the Chicago company can draw interest or royalties as long as the system is used. Notwithstanding that the city paid $4,000 for the privilege of using the tank supplied by this company, it has no right to sell or manufacture it. Under the contract this city has no right to increase its supply of this system of tanks without paying the company five per cent. of the cost.

Under the terms of the contract the city cannot build a duplicate of the present tank, without the usual five per cent. But on this basis the compay will license the city to build. The company has notified Mayor Moy after considerable correspondence, that it is ready to do the work without payment to them of any royalty

Mayor Moy is not yet ready to make any statement as to the city's position in the matter.

Trackman Fatally Injured.

Smith resided at Perth Amboy, where he leaves a wife and several children.

A. orchestra this evening will be solos by Mrs. Byard Hawthorne, contralto soloist, of Trinity Reformed church, and violin solos by A. A. Mosher. A flute quartet, which is a novelty, will be played by A. E. Hallard, J. P. Faber, D. D. Dougherty and W. M. Sampson, with Miss Berg at the piano. The concert begins at 8:15 in Y. M. C. A. Hall.

An Active Congregation.

The congregation of St. Peter's Lutheran church has raised $500 towards the liquidation of the church debt, leaving a total indebtedness of but $300. The men have contributed the money for the paint and will renovate the parsonage at 2 Stone street. The Sunday school has raised money for a new gown for the pastor, Rev. J. Duerschner.

Number 3
THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

TOLD OF STUDENT CREW'S LABRADOR TRIP

Paul Tomlinson, of Elizabeth, one of the six Princeton students who piloted the little ship contributed by the college men to Dr. Grenfell's work at Labrador, told of the trip to the northern coast before the Men's Club of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, last night. It was an "open" session and many friends of the members were in attendance.

The vessel in question was designed to aid in Dr. Grenfell's hospital benevolence along the bleak coast of Labrador and was paid for by the Princeton students When it was completed, six of their number and a pilot were selected to take it to its home port. Mr. Tomlinson was one of the six and he detailed in a most interesting way the various stages of the trip. The route taken was via Long Island Sound, the New England coast, Nova Scotia and thence to Labrador.

While near Nova Scotia, the little ship was enveloped in a fog and reports reached home that the boat and crew had been lost. As a matter of fact, only the customary danger of collision was encountered and all hands emerged from the "blanket" of mist in safety. The trip occupied six weeks in all and the students spent three weeks with Dr. Grenfell after their arrival. Mr. Tomlinson touched lightly on the great work Dr. Grenfell is doing, an account of which the latter gave himself here some years ago.

The affair was in charge of O. S. Rogers, chairman of the entertainment committee, and C. W. Spicer, president of the club, presided. An opening prayer was made by Rev. L. T. Gardner and refreshments were served in conclusion. Mr. Tomlinson was extended a vote of thanks for the address after which he was elected an honorary member of the club.

WHO WILL SPEAK ON CHILD WELFARE

The people of Plainfield will be interested to know something about the noted speakers who are to take part in the public child welfare meeting at the High School this evening. William H. Allen is a graduate of the University of Chicago, who subsequently took post-graduate courses at the universities of Leipsic and Berlin, and is a Ph. D. of the University of Pennsylvania. It was while he was there, that the New Jersey State Charities Aid and Prison Reform Association enlisted his services as secretary, and he started the New Jersey Review of Charities and Corrections. His two reports on the New Jersey State and county institutions, such as almhouses, jails, etc., are considered the best pieces of research work that has ever been done in New Jersey in this line.

Dr. Allen made such splendid use of his opportunity for effective social service in New Jersey, that the New York Association for the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor called him to take charge of their work. His application of up-to-date publicity and advertising methods on behalf of the Sea Breeze Institution for Tuberculosis Crippled Children attracted national attention, and his methods are now being followed by many other organizations throughout the country. At present he is the director of the Bureau of Municipal Research, which he organized, and which has done so much to elicit facts in regard to the schools of Greater New York, and to put the budget making on a scientific basis. He is the author of several scientific works.

Dr. Henry L. Coit is a well known specialist in the treatment of infants, and the whole subject of infant mortality and child hygiene. His work in connection with the Babies' Hospital at Newark has attracted wide attention. John Collier is the secretary of the National Board of Censorship for Moving Pictures, which organization censors the moving picture output of the entire country.

The committee on co-operation of the Charity Organization Society, which is responsible for this child welfare meeting is composed of representatives of various local activities, and its purpose is to bring them together, so that there may be a common understanding of Plainfield's needs, and opportunities, and that they may all pull together for the best human interests of the community.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

The Dunellen Board of Education held the final meeting of the fiscal year, last night, to conclude all business. The annual school meeting will be held tonight and arrangements were made for it. The appropriation asked for is $7,500, an increase of $1,200 over last year. The term of three members of the Board of Education expire, those of F. R. Wynkoop, Theodore W. Day and R. F. Bogardus. So far as known they have announced no determination to withdraw and will stand for election. No other names have been suggested.

Ben Cole, Jr., has presented the Dunellen A. C. with a handsome framed picture of the 1902 baseball team which upheld the borough's reputation on the diamond. It has been hung in a conspicuous place in the club rooms.

A very satisfactory rehearsal of "The District School of Blueberry Corner" was held last night. The principals have their parts well in hand and a delightful evening's entertainment may be anticipated. It will be presented Friday night.

Miss Edith Voorhees has returned home from Muhlenberg Hospital where she underwent treatment for an affection of the ear. The trouble has practically been overcome.

Mrs. Harry Kirchhoff has been visiting relatives at Bridgeton, her former home.

W. G. Holton Council will hold its regular meeting tonight.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

"The Wolf," undoubtedly the greatest success of that now famous author, Eugene Walter, will be brought to the Plainfield theatre, Saturday matinee and night. "The Wolf" is a melodrama of the Canadian Hudson Bay country, in three acts. The first act takes place in front of the home of Andrew McTavish, a Scotch trader, on the banks of the Wind River; the second act is the interior of the same house, and the third is in the woods at the portage of the Little Bear River. The action consumes but a day.

Capt. Barnby Injured.

Word has been received from Guam that Captain Warren Barnby, who married Miss Minnie Copeland, a former teacher in the Washington school in this city, was injured by an explosion of powder while making some experiments in the garrison of the far off island. The extent of the captain's injuries is not known yet.

Physician's Windfall.

Dr. Norman W. Currie's legacy under the will of his late uncle, Dr. D. W. Currie, of Englewood, was far greater than stated yesterday. It will amount to at least $20,000.

THE CUCUMBER.

One Way to Dress It and a Royal Way to Grow It.

If ever an anthology of the foods of the earth comes to be written quite an entertaining chapter could be made out of the cucumber. And some of the extracts would provide material for much mental exercise to decide whether they are humorous or serious. For example, what did the Greek poet mean when he said of a certain woman:

She was to me
More tender than a cucumber?

Only one meaning would have been taken from that equivocal statement by that famous doctor who used to declare that the only way to dress a cucumber is to cut it into very thin slices, sprinkle it with the finest of oil, pepper it plentifully, cover it with vinegar—and then throw it out of the window! On the other hand, Thackeray tells how he "had delicate cucumbers stuffed with forcemeat," while Dickens refers to "salmon, lamb, peas, innocent young potatoes, a cool salad, sliced cucumber, a tender duckling—all there!" Both novelists were evidently men after the heart of the Emperor Tiberius, who was never without cucumbers and had frames made upon wheels, by means of which the growing cucumbers could be moved about and exposed to the full heat of the sun, while in winter they were withdrawn and placed under the protection of frames glazed with mirror stone.

Yet two or three centuries ago the vegetable was looked at suspiciously as cold and treacherous.—London Standard.

FEAR OF LIGHTNING.

It Is Hardly Justified by the Number of Deaths It Causes.

Why are so many people, brave under all other circumstances, so deathly afraid of thunder and lightning?

It is not because lightning is so dangerous, for it isn't half so dangerous as going out of the house on an icy morning, walking down the cellar stairs or a hundred other things we do every day without a thought of personal harm. More people are killed each year by falling building material, more die from fright, than are killed by lightning. The census bureau shows only 169 people killed by lightning in this entire country during a given year, and only thirty of these people were killed in the cities. Heat and the sun killed 763 during the same year, 203 died from cold and freezing and 4,395 were drowned.

But you will find it quite a waste of time during a thunderstorm to try to ease the fears of a person who is afraid by telling him or her that the chances of being killed by lightning are less than two in a million; they will remain just as frightened for all this mortuary knowledge. And after the storm has passed and nerves are steadied the woman who was so frightened a few minutes before will start getting supper on the gas stove, smiling through her tears that the danger has all passed and only laughing if you venture the remark that twice as many people are killed by gas stoves as by lightning.—Country Life In America.

Learned His Own Value.

A husband and wife combination in vaudeville, with the husband as the feeder and the wife as the real attraction, worked for Lew Fields in one of his summer shows. The two were very popular and got much newspaper space; also they had $1,000 a week. One day the husband, puffed up by what the newspapers said about the singing of his wife, went in to see Fields.

"Mr. Fields," he said, "it is $1,200 a week from now on for us or we quit right here."

"Twelve hundred, eh?" Fields asked, with interest.

"Yes, sir, $1,200 a week or we quit and go out on the big time in the Morris circuit."

"Well, sonny," said Field, "I think an awful lot of your wife's work, but I don't think she is worth $1,175 a week to me."—Saturday Evening Post.

Theory and Practice.

Here is a good story from the collection of a German school inspector. The pupils were being examined on the subject of personal hygiene. A boy was asked, "What have you to do in order to keep your teeth sound and white?" "Clean them," was the prompt reply. "When ought you to clean them?" "Morning, noon and night." "What are they to be cleaned with?" "With a toothbrush." "Very good. Have you a toothbrush?" "No, sir," "Has your father a toothbrush?" "No, sir. "Has your mother a toothbrush?" "No, sir." "But how do you know about the use of toothbrushes?" "We sell them, sir."

Character In Handwriting.

I showed a professor of caligraphy a letter I had received. He took a very unfavorable view of the handwriting. It was the handwriting, he told me, of a man without learning, without genius, without feeling. "And, now, sir," I said, "will you look at the signature?" The letter was written by Lord Macaulay.—Arnold's "Three Cornered Essays."

A Canine Reason.

She (on the beach at Atlantic City)—I wonder why that dog tried to bite me just now. He—The intelligent animal heard me call you a little witch, and he probably thought you were a sandwich.—Baltimore American.

The man who can be nothing but serious or nothing but merry is but half a man.—Hunt.

The Coming of the Postman is always an occasion of interest. You like to receive letters. Everybody does. And doesn't a letter written on fine, high-grade stationery give you more pleasure than one written on "just paper?"

The best paper that we know of is that manufactured by

EATON, CRANE & PIKE

For years this has been the universal favorite among discriminating people. There is as much difference between it and the "no-name" kind as there is between linen and cambric cloth. Prove it for yourself by comparison.

CATCHING COLD.

Due to Infection and Not at All to Changes In the Weather.

Have you ever noticed in church immediately after a prayer or a sermon is finished some one starts a cough and then a whole battery of coughs explode? The modern physician will tell you by way of explanation that microbe emanations from the breath of the coughers find their way into the respiratory tract of others, who thereupon cough too. Not alone in church, but in theaters and other indoor places where people gather in large numbers, is this coughing habit noticeable.

In an article dealing with this subject published in the Independent it is explained that colds are slight infectious fevers which spread particularly among the population of cities and which are due to contagion and not at all to changes in the weather. These may predispose by lowering resistive vitality and by disturbing the circulation in mucous membranes, but it is the presence of an infectious germ that gives rise to the symptoms of the cold. When one of these bothersome affections gets into a household usually more than one person suffers from it, and it spreads in offices and schools and the like. It is much more frequently caught in a crowd than anywhere else.

The people who have a succession of colds during the winter time and those who have to work where many people come and go during the day are particularly susceptible to them. It is not to some sudden change in the weather that the physician looks for the origin of a cold, but to some rather intimate contact with other sufferers from similar affection.

FAT AND FLOWERS.

Extracting Their Dainty Perfumes From Odorous Blossoms.

By a process known as enfleurage, which is the exposure of beef fat to fresh flowers in closed boxes until it is thoroughly permeated and charged with their odors, the perfumes of various flowers are obtained which could not otherwise be so effectually preserved apart from the fresh petals. Those flowers are violet, jasmine, tuberose, rose, orange flower and cassie (cinnamon flowers). From those six there are fifty or more combinations made for the simulation of the odors of other flowers. Sweet pea is made with orange flower and jasmine; hyacinth is counterfeited by jasmine and tuberose and the lily of the valley by violet and tuberose.

The resources of the perfumer are, however, by no means confined to the pomades, as the scented fats are termed. He uses many essential oils, the principal of which are sandalwood, bergamot, lemon, rosemary, neroli (made from bitter orange flowers), patchouli and attar of roses. The latter, which is not now used so much as formerly, is very difficult to obtain in a pure state, because its great cost tempts to dishonest adulteration. Very often geranium oil is substituted for it. Musk is another important ingredient, entering, as it does, into almost all perfumes except those that actually are imitations of flower odors or, as styled by perfumers, "natural"—as, for instance, the heliotrope, tuberose, white rose and violet.—New York Press.

The Music Soothed Him.

In his book "My Life's Pilgrimage" Thomas Catling gives an interesting glimpse of Gladstone in the Midlothian campaign of 1880:

I happened to meet an organist from Edinburgh, who told me that in the throes of that electoral fight Mr. Gladstone soothed and steadied himself with music. Having arranged a time for the organ practice, he was provided with a key, by means of which he could enter the church quite privately. Silently and alone he would sit in one of the pews with his forehead resting on his hands while the organist played over a number of familiar and impressive hymn tunes. The listener neither looked up nor spoke until the hour compelled him to move. Then, with a "Thank you," he passed out to throw himself again into the bustling political contest.

Forestalled.

"Widows," said the observing man, "are very attractive, but about a widower there is always something uncanny, something almost clammy—I mean, of course, from the matrimonial point of view.

"I know a widower who is thinking of marrying again. He thought he'd broach the matter delicately the other morning to his little daughter, so he said:

"'Ah, my dear, how I did love your mother!'

"But the little girl gave him a suspicious look and snapped:

"'Say "do," not "did," papa.'"—Washington Star.

His Mexican Commission.

"Yes, he's a very merry wag. The last time he went to Mexico his wife asked him to bring back some of the embroidery work for which the country is famous. When he reached home he handed her a box containing half a dozen human teeth.

"Mercy," she cried, "what's this?"

"Mexican drawn work," he tripplingly replied.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Not Missing Much.

"How do you like this grand opera, Bill?"

"I can't understand what they are saying."

"That's all right. You ain't missing no jokes."—Pittsburg Post.

A Desperate Game

By JOHN K. LEYS,

Author of "The Lindsays," "The Lawyer's Secret," "The Black Terror," Etc.

Copyright, 1903, by John K. Leys.

"Yes, thank God! How did you manage to get it posted, darling? And what was that letter you inclosed? I couldn't understand it, but I barely had time to glance through it, as I was coming here in a hansom. We happened to pass a police office, so I rushed in and left the letter there, saying that I would explain later how I got it. I thought most likely the police were the proper persons to deal with it."

"But what was in it? Did it say anything about Miss Eva?"

"Not a word. That is what hurts me—to think that I should have come too late; that they should have got clear away!"

"Could we not follow them?"

"But where? How? Wait a moment. That letter—it was to make an appointment this morning. One of them may have gone to keep the appointment. But that is a mere guess. And, at any rate, I don't remember the address."

"Then we can't do anything," she said anxiously.

"We must go first to the police station. Perhaps they can tell us something."

"What a stupid I am!" cried Nora suddenly, searching the floor with her eyes and then lifting one or two things off the side table. She found it—the torn envelope all stained with chocolate—in the blotter, where she had carelessly left it. "Here is the address."

"Capital! But I must drive you home first."

"Let me come with you, please. Perhaps—who knows?—Miss Eva may be there."

"I'm afraid it's not likely, but of course you can come. We will go together. Only, dearest, you mustn't say Miss Eva any more." To this Nora made no reply. The remembrance of her promise to Lady Roscommon crossed her mind like a blighting east wind across a garden in springtime.

It was a long drive away eastward, although to Nora and her lover it seemed short enough. They were just in time. The cab stopped near a tall, grimy house, whose dust dimmed windows looked out on a small crowd of boys and loafers who clustered round the street door and had to be kept back by a burly constable. On Terence's explaining that it was he who had given information to the police he was allowed to pass through the crowd and up the steps, Nora clinging to his arm. The door was opened at a signal from the constable on duty outside, and the lovers found awaiting them Nora's late custodians, all three of them, watched by two policemen.

Virginie gave a little scream and turned white, but shut her vixenish teeth close together and did not utter a word. But the tall man edged a little nearer to Nora, and as the attention of the policemen was diverted by a shout from one of the upper floors he managed to whisper to her:

"I hope you don't bear any malice, madam. You see, it was necessary for our own—it really was necessary from our point of view—that you should not leave the house last night. I wonder how you managed to send off a letter, as I suppose you must have done."

"Don't you remember? You posted one for me," said Nora, with a mischievous look.

The man gave a half laugh and added in an earnest undertone: "I do hope, madam, you won't say anything about that little affair. We did not treat you rudely; you will admit that?. I set my face against anything like violence from the first. May I hope that you won't say anything about it to the police? Don't, for the love of heaven, make things any harder for us. God knows they are hard enough already!"

Nora gave him a nod that amounted to a promise, and the next moment the cause of the shout overhead was apparent. The door was thrown violently open and two constables appeared, dragging between them a large black haired man, who was loudly protesting his innocence and giving the police all the trouble he could.

"They are mine own, every one of them!" he screamed. "Every one of them, so help me! Would you rob a poor man of his savings? Haven't I a right to buy jewels as well as a rich man?"

"Hold your noise!" said a harsh voice behind him, and an inspector entered, bearing a large tea tray on which were arranged a magnificent assortment of jewels.

"Hello! There are my father's emeralds, as I live!" cried Terence. "And I recognize these, and these, and these," he exclaimed, pointing to one set of gems after another.

"You had better make your claim at Scotland Yard, or ask your father, if the jewels belong to him, to call there in the course of the day," said the inspector. "But the jewels will have to remain with us till after these gentlemen appear at the Old Bailey."

The jewels, which had been partly found in the luggage of Virginie and her friends and partly in the private hiding places of the receiver, were carried off by the police, and in due time the criminals did appear at the Old Bailey and were sentenced as they deserved.

Captain Fitzgerald started at once for Castle Dare, for he wished to impress upon his father the fact that but for Nora his precious gems would never have been recovered, and he fancied he could do this most effectually if he himself carried the good news home.

"This will put an end to my mother's opposition," he whispered to Nora as he kissed her at parting. "She will give you back your promise."

But Nora sighed, though she let Terence kiss her without making a fuss over it. She knew Lady Roscommon, she fancied, better than her own son did, and she did not feel so sure.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

THE STROKE OF FATE.

It was not without reason that Sir Rufus Deveril had tried to drug Guy Lorimer, then locked him in his room and finally struck him down with a loaded stick upon the stairs. The baronet had made up his mind that, come what might, he would have his own way. He would make Eva his wife and secure her £80,000 for himself. It was the only way he saw by which he could avoid falling into the abyss of poverty which for him was the last and worst of evils. It was necessary that Eva should set out from the castle of her own accord. He meant to pretend that Mr. Lorimer had met with a railway accident and had sent for her. It was the only plan he could think of for getting her to leave the castle alone with him. Of course if she and Guy were allowed to meet, this he would not answer; therefore it was necessary that Guy should be silenced.

When he had dragged Guy's senseless body into an adjoining room and locked the door Sir Rufus listened for some minutes to make sure that he had not disturbed any one in the castle. But all was quiet, and he then went to his own room, threw himself on a couch and slept till daybreak.

Then he awoke, looked at his watch, and, finding that it was within an hour of the time he had told the cabman to be ready, he dressed himself hastily and went up to Eva's room.

Tapping firmly, but without making much noise, he soon succeeded in waking her.

"What is it?" she called out. "Who is there?"

"It is I, Sir Rufus. I am sorry to say that I have bad news for you, very bad news. I think you had better rise and dress yourself as quickly as you can. When you are ready I will come back for you."

He waited till he could hear a faint rustling movement within and then turned and ran downstairs. A glance out of a window told him that the cab was there, waiting. All was going well, as well as he could wish.

With the success of his schemes his spirits rose till the desire to have some one to witness his triumph became a necessity. And what better witness, he asked himself, could he have than his defeated foe, the treacherous scoundrel whom he had devoted to a justly merited fate? There was just time enough, he thought, to pay a short visit to his captive and see how he was getting on.

In another minute he was hurrying along the passage that led to the cellars.

He was careful, of course, not to enter the particular cellar in which Foscombe was confined. He went into the one next to it. The wall between them was pierced by two or three ventilating holes, about two feet in height by seven or eight inches broad, at a height of five feet from the ground. It was thus quite easy to see and speak with any one in the adjoining cellar, though impossible to touch him.

Sir Rufus went to one of the apertures and, leaning on the wall, called out, "Foscombe!"

The lawyer rose and looked at his enemy through the opening. As it happened there were no wine bins under the hole in the wall, so that they could see each other very well. There was only the breadth of the wall, about fifteen inches, between them.

"How are you getting on?" asked the baronet, speaking very fast. "Hope you had a pleasant night? Sorry to leave you so abruptly, but it was necessary, my dear fellow, quite necessary, to prevent your interfering with my little plans. I am glad to say that they are quite successful, quite. My bride is dressing herself at this moment, and the carriage is at the door. In two hours and a half we shall be afloat. What do you say to that?"

He advanced his face, distorted by a malicious grin, to the aperture. The lawyer eyed him steadily.

"When do you mean to let me out?" he said.

"After the honeymoon, my dear Foscombe. I'm very much afraid I shan't have time before then. And if by any accident the marriage should not come off, I fear that I may forget all about you. So you will pray for our happy wedding and safe return, my good Foscombe."

Foscombe said nothing. Was the man mad? he asked himself. Certainly it looked as if he were.

"It's no use your calling out, my dear man. Cry and scream as loud as you like. No one can possibly hear you. Don't consider my feelings in the matter. Pray, think only of yourself. You have always done so, haven't you?"

"Tell me this," said the lawyer in a voice hoarse with the cold of the cellar and vibrating with passion: "Did you not propose yourself that we should settle the matter by playing chess?"

"Ha, ha! Ha, ha, ha! I thought you would hark back to that. Why, you fool, don't you see that as you cheated and duped me, so I had to cheat and dupe you in order to get even with you? It is a principle with me—always get even with your man—at any cost get even with him."

A thought darted through the mind of the prisoner, making him tremble from head to foot. The next second the trembling fit had passed. He was cool and master of himself once more.

Could he do it? He thought he could. He was sure he could. Could he justify it? He thought he could. His liberty had been taken away. His life had been threatened.

As Sir Rufus went on in the same strain Foscombe stealthily drew a bottle from its place in the wine bin on his right. Then, taking it by the cork end, he gently shook it free of its straw wrapper. He grasped it more firmly and moved his arm, then leaned his left arm against the wall to steady himself.

"I must go now," said the baronet. "Mustn't keep the bride waiting, you know. That would never"—

That word was his last.

Swinging the heavy missile behind him, Foscombe brought it up over his head and dashed it with tremendous force through the aperture. It struck the wretched man squarely between the eyes, and he went down as if he had been struck by a shell. Where he fell there he lay.

Foscombe, peering through at his handiwork, watched the still figure, himself all white and trembling, for half an hour. But it did not move.

Then he went to the window, with a savage wrench tore aside the stanchion, drew himself up to the window sill and passed through.

Holding on with one hand, he scanned the precipice. It seemed quite practicable. He even thought that he could detect marks on the rocks as though a rough pathway had at one time existed there. There were points of rock which would give him support. To be sure, the prospect of the lake lying so many feet below was somewhat terrifying, but he would not look at it. He would keep his gaze fixed on the castle. Just under the window the rock was smooth and nearly level. He sat down on the window sill, then turned round and let himself drop.

Guy Lorimer had been stunned, not killed outright. When he came to himself it was pitch dark, and he could not in the least remember where he was or how he had come there. His head ached frightfully and a strong feeling of nausea almost overpowered him. But he managed to rise to his feet, and, taking a few paces forward, he stumbled upon a bed. He could do no more than hoist himself to the top of it, and immediately he fell back utterly exhausted. A few minutes later he was fast asleep.

His sleep lasted for several hours, and he was awakened by a scream so loud, so piercing, that in an instant he was wide awake. His memory returned. He remembered that he had before been awakened by a scream.

When he tried to leave the room he found the door locked, and then more details came back to him. Eva was in the castle. He had been going to her when he had been felled like an ox in a slaughter house. Was it possible that it was her scream he had just heard? Somehow he thought not. It was too deep for a woman's scream. It had sounded more like the last despairing yell of a man in agony.

But while these thoughts were passing through his mind he was battering at the door. A footstep came, then a voice—the dearest voice in the world to him!

"Eva, darling, let me out!" he cried. In another moment she was sobbing in his arms.

They left the castle within the hour, and it was not for some days that the truth about Sir Rufus and the lawyer came to light. The bent stanchion told its own tale, and the lake under the castle was dragged, with the result that the body of Foscombe was recovered, and in searching for the reason of the accident, as it was supposed to be, the body of Sir Rufus was also found lying where it had fallen. It was lucky for Guy that he had Eva to testify that she had found him locked up in a room about a minute after she heard the scream, or he might have been suspected of having caused the death of either Foscombe or his victim. As it was, no suspicion could attach to him, and it was generally believed that the baronet and his friend had quarreled, that Foscombe had murdered his host and had then committed suicide.

Lady Roscommon was so relieved at hearing the news from Guy that the fear which had cast a gloom over her life for so many years had no foundation, that she offered no more opposition to his marriage with Eva. "But," she said to her daughter as she made this concession, "that does not mean that I will ever consent to your brother marrying the young woman who was my maid. One mesalliance is enough in a family."

But for once her ladyship had reckoned without her host.

On the way to London Terence had so skillfully worked on his father's passion for his jewels and his Irish feelings of gratitude that he had easily got him to consent to his marrying Nora as a reward for her services.

Then, when all this had been settled and the old man, having practically recovered his gems, was in the height of good humor, Terence brought Nora to him for the paternal blessing. The viscount was charmed with her.

"My dear," he said, "I don't know where my eyes were all the time you were in my house, but, upon my word, I never saw you."

"Nora is vexing herself, father, that she promised my mother once that she would never marry me," he said.

"Did she, then? Leave that to me, my son," said the old peer. And Terence knew that the matter was settled. So it was. It would perhaps be impertinent to inquire what was the nature of the arguments that Lord Roscommon used to his wife. It is enough that they were effectual. Lady Roscommon received her former waiting maid as her daughter-in-law if not with enthusiasm at least with a show of good feeling, and Nora, gentle hearted creature, became her slave from that time forth. She and her husband live in London, for Terence is still with his regiment, and they are as happy as the day is long.

THE END.

THE PRUDENTIAL'S REMARKABLE REPORT

Wonderful Rise of New Jersey's Great Life Insurance Company from Small Beginnings.

Since its organization The Prudential has paid out to policyholders or has invested for their security and now holds for them at interest the enormous sum of four hundred and eight million dollars.

From assets of one hundred and sixty-eight thousand dollars thirty years ago to two hundred and twenty-seven million dollars today.

Insurance in force in 1880 of seven million dollars now grown to almost two billion dollars.

From a Company which paid to policyholders in 1880 fifty-seven thousand dollars, considered a large amount in those days, to a Company paying out in a single year over twenty-four million dollars!

These are some of the almost incomprehensible features shown in the annual report of President John F. Dryden just issued to Ordinary policyholders of The Prudential Insurance Company, the Company which thirty-five years ago started under the most obscure and humble conditions in a small basement office in the city of Newark.

This is a remarkable report, and while it is impossible here to give more than a summary, it should be read in full by every one interested in life insurance matters, showing, as it does, not only what a vast work of development and conservation must be going on in this Company, but to what limitless extent the beneficent influence of such an institution must be felt throughout the country with the great masses of the population.

What character of business system and executive skill must have been employed in the conduct of the Company's affairs is well indicated by some of these figures. During 1910 over four hundred and sixty-two million dollars of new insurance was written—three hundred and twenty-four millions of this being Industrial and over one hundred and thirty-seven millions Ordinary—over two million two hundred thousand individual policies being issued in these transactions.

The insurance in force in the Company was increased to the immense sum of one billion eight hundred and fifty-one million dollars, an increase of over one hundred and sixty-six million for the year.

Over nine million five hundred thousand policies are now in force in The Prudential, about six hundred and eleven thousand of these being Ordinary policies and the rest of the Industrial class.

Policyholders who may through necessity lapse their policies are protected.

During 1910 the Company issued about 89,000 paid-up Industrial policies, and in over ten thousand cases relief from payment of Industrial premiums was granted to policyholders who attained 75 years of age. Over $41,000 fully paid-up Industrial policies are now in force in this Company, giving protection to policyholders exceeding fifteen million dollars, upon which no further premiums are required, a striking indication of the liberality of the modern Industrial life insurance company.

In addition to this, cash values were paid during the year on 20,000 Industrial policies.

Financial Figures.

The total income of the Company during 1910 exceeded seventy-four million dollars, an increase of seven million dollars over the previous year. Out of this income, in accordance with the law, a proper amount has been set aside for the future protection of policy contracts and for dividends to policyholders.

The Company paid to policyholders during the year over twenty-four million dollars, of which eighteen million dollars represented payments on death claims, matured endowments and annuities. Over three million dollars was paid in dividends to policyholders, of which $1,456,122.72 went to Ordinary policyholders who were insured before August 1, 1907, and $1,559,216.70 was paid to Industrial policyholders insured prior to January 1, 1907, these being the respective dates upon which the Company ceased issuing participating policies.

The amount paid to policyholders, together with the sum set aside to their credit at interest—more than forty-eight million dollars—was the largest in the history of the Company.

Assets and Liabilities.

At the end of last year the Company's assets were valued at $227,001,002.33, as against $200,643,373.99 December 31, 1909. The liabilities at the end of 1910 amount to $208,324,011.61. Of that sum the most important item was the reserve, calculated at $178,159,197. The reserve represents the amount which the law requires to be held in trust for the carrying out to maturity of all the Company's policy contracts. Included in the Company's liabilities is an item of $23,830,342.93. That is the amount apportioned to participating policies. It is from this apportionment that policy dividends are being paid, "and will be paid in the future till all these contracts have been fulfilled." After setting aside this money to the credit of participating policyholders, the Company's surplus, including its capital stock, was $18,676,990.72.

Among the Company's assets as set forth in its financial exhibit is an item showing that its real estate is valued at $16,315,918. The Company has $49,356,100 in bonds and mortgages, and as their market value, last December, the railroad bonds that it owns were worth $88,404,960. Its State, county and municipal and miscellaneous bonds had on December last a market value of $31,459,831.

There are many other very interesting items in this report which will repay the reading. Among these are statements as to the amounts of insurance in force and the claims paid in various States, and a most valuable report upon the mortality in the Ordinary department, showing the causes of deaths of policyholders at various ages. There are also references to the endorsement of the Company and its methods made by the State Department of Banking and Insurance, including an allowance of assets of over $1,000,000 more than the Company's own valuations at the end of 1909. There is also a table of comparisons showing remarkable growth of the Company at various five-year periods during the last thirty years.

The report closes by reference to the traditional policy of The Prudential as to the conservation of the interests of policyholders and a suggestion to them as to the manner in which they can materially aid in this conservation by their co-operation with the life insurance companies in their opposition to unrighteous and inequitable taxation.

The case of Patrick McCann against Morris Knoblock, in the police court of Passaic, Sunday morning, was adjourned. McCann claimed that Knoblock, who keeps a saloon at 97 Monroe street, Passaic, sold liquor to a nine-year-old girl.

Rev. Charles J. McFadden, assistant rector of St. Nicholas's church, Atlantic City, completed his twenty-fifth years as a priest yesterday and an elaborate program was carried out by the priests of the Augustinian Order in celebration of this event.

Caught in machinery at the coke plant, foot of Mt. Vernon street, Camden, Sunday afternoon, Domnick Pianero, twenty-four years old, of 828 South Third street, had all the fingers so badly torn that his right hand had to be amputated at Cooper Hospital.

John Clark, who had no home, and was locked in the Camden city jail on a charge of drunkenness, attempted suicide Sunday by hanging himself with a handkerchief which was tied around his neck and then slipped over a hook in the wall. Sergeant Golden discovered Clark before life was extinct, and cut him down. He begged for some means to end his life, declaring he was tired of living.

"I Know of NONE Better Than The Prudential"

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PARK GOLF CLUB

The presentation of annual reports and election of officers, together with a discussion of plans for the coming year, made the annual meeting of the Park Golf Club, held at the Park Club, last night, an interesting one. The reports showed the club to have a membership of 130 with the prospects of securing many additional ones the coming season.

The report of the treasurer showed a small deficit, which was caused by an outlay for club betterments. When explained this amount was made up at the meeting so that the account stands all even. There was a discussion as to the advisability of increasing the annual dues from $15 to $18, and is was finally decided to leave it to an individual vote of the members to be decided upon.

It was decided to plan to open the golf course in April, provided the weather will permit, and as soon as the committees are appointed which will be within a few days, the members will get busy so that everything will be in readiness for the opening of the season.

The nominating committee comprising Samuel Townsend and J. B. Betts presented the following for trustees and they were unanimously chosen: Charles W. McCutchen, Alexander Gilbert, George A. Chapman, Miss Lydie Loizeaux, Dr. H. K. Carrol and Charles B. Morse.

After the regular meeting, the trustees were called together and these officers were elected: President, Charles W. McCutchen; vice-president, George A. Chapman; secretary-treasurer, Charles B. Morse. The president will appoint his committees within a few days. S. St. John McCutchen and Charles B. Morse were appointed a committee to make any necessary revision in the club's constitution.

FOR CHILD'S SAKE

Baby Clinic and Free Milk Depot Advocated at Infant Welfare Meeting.

HUGH F. FOX PRESIDES.

Dr. Coit, John Collier and Mr. Fox Make Timely Suggestions—Value of the Moving Picture Pointed Out.

If all the suggestions given at the Child Welfare meeting in the High School auditorium last night, by the speakers are adopted in this city we shall soon have a free baby clinic, a milk depot, a free dental clinic and perhaps children will not be sent to school until they reach the school age, 7 years. All of these things were warmly advocated by Hugh F. Fox and Dr. Henry L. Coit, the child specialist, of Newark. Dr. W. H. Allen, who was to have spoken on the babies' hospital, was unable to be present owing to illness, but the evening was well taken up by those who did speak. John Collier, secretary of the Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures, told of the present and coming advantages to educational methods of motion pictures, exhibiting two rolls of films each telling a remarkable story.

In introducing Dr. Coit, Mr. Fox said that the meeting was in the nature of a get together movement and as Plainfield is a wide awake city and is wisely governed it is always alive to the needs of its people. The Board of Education is not letting anything in the nature of an improvement get by, he said, and this ought to satisfy the people that they are getting the best available in educational lines. The board as well as the teachers are imbued with high ideals, he declared, and they know that the individual child and adult are things to be studied.

Mr. Fox suggested that the city fathers take up the matter of including the parochial schools in the medical inspection of school children, saying that the physical welfare of all is an asset the city should be able to depend on. The free dental clinic, he said, is up to the Common Council.

Dr. Coit spoke at length of the infant mortality of the registered cities and towns of the country declaring that 140,000 children under the age of one year died in 1910 from diseases which in many cases were preventable. "If stock raisers," he said, "should have to suffer such losses among their cattle they would soon have to go out of business. Twenty years ago I tried to get the legislation through which was passed in 1909 and only through the splendid work of Senator Frelinghuysen was the preventive law passed. I finally induced Governor Fort to sign the bill after I had persuaded him that it was constitutional and had shown him a photograph of one of the infants the bill was designed to protect.

"Malnutrition causes more deaths than anything else and fifty per cent. of the blindness can be prevented by proper sanitary methods applied immediately after the birth of a child. In Budapest they have the finest children's hospital in the world and there such a thing as a milk laboratory is not known. The mothers supply the natural food for their infants. They also have the most beautiful women in the world there. In that hospital, which occupies a whole block, the entire staff is devoted to the care of infants and it is doing a wonderful work.

"In Toronto there is a hospital for infants in which there are 180 beds and it, too, is doing a magnificent work. I do not believe the American women do not want to nurse their children, but I believe that it is due to our civilization that so much carelessness exists among them. Infant feeding is not an exact science yet, but steps are being taken along the line of making it so and we may some day solve all the problems presented by the very young. In any event the best results are obtained by studying the history of the child.

"Childhood may be properly divided into four periods—the first year is the period of absorbtion (sic), from the first to the third year it is the period of organic functional integrity; from the third to the seventh year is the period of physical evolution and adaptation to environment and from seven to fourteen is the period of ripening of the senses, and should properly begin the school period. No child should be sent to school until it is seven years old."

Dr. Coit confirmed the necessity for the baby clinic and the other suggestions made by Mr. Fox. He said that such a clinic should be attached to some already established institution to be effective. Percentages ranging from 21 to 29 were given by the doctor indicative of the death rate among infants in the big centers

ARRAIGNED IN COURT FOR BURNING RUBBISH.

Two men from different sections of the city were caught burning rubbish in the streets yesterday and ordered to appear before Judge DeMeza in the city court this morning. They were Peter Gordon, employed at Madison avenue and Eighth street, and C. O. Smith, of Liberty and Fourth street.

In the case of Gordon ignorance of the law proved the means of a discharge and in that of Smith the fact that by turning a burning oil tank out into the street and perhaps saving a serious fire secured his discharge. Smith said the tank had been ignited by some boys and in order to prevent his stable from catching fire he rolled the thing to the street and let it burn.

Hungarian Scrappers.

Frank Stopansky and Frank Prozen, two Hungarians living at 619 South Second street, were discharged this morning by Judge DeMeza before whom they were arraigned on charges of disorderly conduct made by Mrs. Mary Romanski, of the same address. Mrs. Romanski charged the two young men with breaking a rocking chair and throwing the pieces away. After hearing all about the trouble Judge DeMeza discharged the accused.

At the midweek service of the Congregational church this evening several members of the Salvation Army, including Captain A. S. Hewitt, will take part in the service.

MUST HAVE LICENSE TAG ON AUTOMOBILES

Edward Edel, chauffeur for a local garage, against whom a charge of driving an automobile without a license was made by the police, was discharged with a warning by Judge DeMeza in the city court this morning.

Judge DeMeza said afterwards that the practice of taking automobiles through the streets of Plainfield without the license tag on must stop. Within the past week or ten days three drivers have been arrested charged with this offense and in such case the offender has been discharged with a reprimand. The next case that comes before the court will result in some other punishment besides the humiliation of police detention. The practice must be stopped, said the court.

MRS. WM. TOWNLEY HAS PASSED AWAY

Mary Elizabeth Townley, wife of Captain William Townley, of the city fire department, died last evening at her home on Watchung avenue. She had been ailing for a long time with a pulmonary complaint but sheer determination and will power preventive held it in abeyance. She refused submission until almost the last moment, taking to her bed only Monday afternoon. The end came at 6 o'clock.

Mrs. Townley was born at Hampton, Hunterdon county, forty-two years ago, her maiden name being Mary Elizabeth Doyle. She came to this city with her mother, the late Mrs. William Dagnall, when a young girl and had resided here ever since. She had a host of friends in all parts of the city and borough and all held her in the highest esteem. To know her at all meant tried and true friendship on her part as she had demonstrated on many occasions. Those who knew her from a distance gave her their sincere admiration for the cheerful disposition she maintained in the face of almost overwhelming odds.

The members of Mrs. Townley's family all passed away within a few years and the only one surviving is Mrs. U. G. Force, of Richmond street, a sister. There are several nieces and nephews, all residing in Plainfield. Captain Townley, who has suffered bereavement in his own family three times within two years, has the sympathy of all his friends.

The funeral will be held at the late home Friday morning at 8:15 and at St. Mary's church at 9 o'clock. Burial will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

HENDRY IS PRESIDENT OF HOPE MEN'S CLUB

Elections of officers and a discussion of plans for the coming year comprised the chief business at the meeting of the Men's Club at Hope chapel, last night. These officers were elected:

President, Thomas Gibson Hendry; vice-president, John Brandon Slorah; treasurer, Walter Irving Firstbrook; recording secretary, Frank Rimmer; financial secretary, William Baker; chaplain, Rev. Frederic L. Greene.

Walter I. Firstbrook presented the annual report of the treasurer, showing the financial condition of the club to be satisfactory. The total amount raised during the year was $163.98 and the disbursements $112.33, leaving a balance of $51.65.

A committe of five, John B. Slorah, Walter I. Firstbrook, Donald McInnes, Frank Rimmer and William Baker was appointed to confer with the pastor, Rev. Frederic L. Greene regarding a series of special sermons for men on Sunday evenings for a period of from four to six weeks. Further announcement will be made as to dates, subjects, etc. The next meeting of the club was announced for Tuesday evening, April 18. Supper and cigars were enjoyed after the business session.

Geran Bill Passed.

By a vote of 34 to 25, or with a majority of three more than necessary, the Geran election reform bill was passed in the Assembly at Trenton yesterday and Governor Wilson thereby won a victory no less notable than his conquest over James Smith, Jr., and the Democratic machine in the United States Senate fight.

Abram Staats.

Abram Staats, who was well known in this city, died suddenly at his home in East Millstone, Monday following a three days' illness with diphtheria. He was taken ill in the south while on a business trip and hurried home.

SUNDAY MAIL RULE

Order Issued to Discontinue Delivery at Carriers' Window on That Day.

HELPS POSTOFFICE EMPLOYEES

General Window to Be Open for Benefit of Transients—New Orders Not Yet Put in Force Here.

One day of rest each week is assured to a large number of employees in the postal service under instructions just sent out by Postmaster-General Hitchcock, and Plainfield will probably be included. Postal employees, for a long time, have been objecting to the rule which compels them to work two or three hours at the postoffice every Sunday morning without extra remuneration, and it is understood that the one thing that brought about the change is that the employees decided to put in a claim for working these few hours on Sunday.

It is the purpose of the Government to discontinue the present system of delivering mail through the carriers' windows which requires the attendance of about half the force in each office for several hours on Sunday. The important postoffices will not be closed on Sunday because a certain amount of work must be done to prevent congestion and delay of mails.

Mails will be received and dispatched as heretofore and arrangements will be made probably for a limited delivery through the general deliveray window for the accommodation of the travelling public. The distribution of mail to boxes will be continued and special delivery letters will also be delivered.

FANWOOD RE-ELECTS SCHOOL'S TRUSTEES

Edward L. Hand, S. G. VanHoesen and Samuel Hollingsworth were elected members of the school board at the annual school meeting of Fanwood township, last night, the term being three years and $5,000, the amount asked for by the board for the coming year, was granted without a dissenting vote. John Z. Hatfield was chairman and Thomas J. Nichol acted as secretary. The annual report showed an average attendance for the year of 81 per cent.

During the year fifteen non-resident pupils received tuition, the fees for the same being paid by the adjoining towns in which the children resided. The local board paid for the tuition of twenty-seven pupils to the Westfield Board of Education and for twenty pupils to the Plainfield Board of Education.

The statement showed a balance of $8,348.30.

DAYBREAK IN TURKEY DISCUSSED BY WOMEN

"Daybreak in Turkey" was the subject discussed in the Congregational church by the Women's Foreign Missionary Society yesterday afternoon. It was the third period of this particular topic and proved fascinating to the large number of members present. Papers were read by Mrs. Carl Steiner and Miss McIntosh which proved absorbingly interesting. Statistics up to the end of January were included in the reports from Turkey, all of which made encouraging data for the consideration of the women.

After the session which, in the absence of Mrs. John M. Whiton, the president, was presided over by Mrs. Charles L. Goodrich, tea was served by Mrs. Fuller, and Eugene Martin, a choirster of Grace P. E. church, sang solos accompanied by his sister, Miss Elizabeth Martin.

MISS WILLIAMS BRIDE OF WINFRED R. HARRIS.

Miss Nellie Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julius J. Williams, of Essex street, and Winfred R. Harris, of Bridgeton, will be married this afternoon at the home of the bride's parents by Rev. Edwin Shaw. Music for the ocasion will be furnished by Miss Ethel Rogers, pianist, accompanied by G. Grover Williams on the violin.

Mr. and Mrs. Harris will reside at Bridgeton, where the groom will engage in the poultry business. He formerly held a position with the Southern Bell Telephone Company. The bride received a great many handsome gifts of silverware, cutglass, etc., also the present of a home at Bridgeton from the groom.

RISK GIVEN DAMAGES BY READING RAILROAD

The suit instituted by Judge William G. DeMeza on behalf of Alexander Risk, of Belle Meade, against the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, for injuries sustained by Risk while standing alongside the gates at Hamilton, was settled out of court yesterday. It is said that Risk obtained substantial damages.

Mr. Risk was awaiting alongside the closed gates at Hamilton when an express train was about to pass by. As the engine rushed by a piece of iron, presumably a part of the mechanism of the locomotive, struck Mr. Risk on the head cutting a four-inch wound in the scalp. He was fortunate to have escaped instant death.

EXCELLENT CONCERT BY Y.M.C.A. ORCHESTRA

The forty-second and last concert of the season of the Y. M. C. A. orchestra was given last night in association hall and was heard by a large and appreciative audience. Numbers on the program of a novel nature provoked much applause as did the soloists. The deficit of $40 was wiped out by the offerings of the audience.

Mrs. Byard Hawthorne, contralto soloist of Trinity Reformed church sang her numbers with beautiful expession and taste responding to an encore in the first part. A. A. Mosher never played with greater depth of feeling than he did last night giving the utmost expression to his interpretation of music by Wagner and Marie. Messrs. A. E. Hallard, J. P. Faber, D. D. Dougherty and Walter Sampson accompanied by Miss Berg on the piano, made a distinct hit in the flute quartet. It was enthusiastically applauded. The trio by Ernest Higham, George Spier and Edward Spier in which the "Curious Duet" by Mastrino was played evoked much amusement and was really well done.

As to the orchestra it was all that could be desired. The ensemble playing was probably best in the "Paraphrase on the Palms" by Faure. The piano accompaniments by Miss Berg, Herbert Harold and Mrs. Mosher were splendidly effective.

On Tuesday evening, April 14, Leon Rice, a noted tenor singer, will give an evening of song in the hall and without any admission being charged. Mr. Rice is well known as a singer among the Christians of the land and has recently refused a tempting offer from Oscar Hammerstein to appear in vaudeville. He has a large repertoire.

HOW TO READ BOOKS TOLD BY DR. BALLIET

Dr. Thos. M. Balliet, dean of New York University, gave the fourth in the course of lectures to the teachers of Plainfield and North Plainfield at the Somerset School yesterday afternoon, on the subject of "Reading." He argued that it is unwise to place brilliant pupils and slow pupils in the same class, because they need essentially different treatment. It is sometimes argued that the brilliant pupils will inspire the dull, but this is not true in practice. On the contrary it is discouraging to the dull children to see the bright read well so easily.

Then again, sometimes, Dr. Balliet said, the bright pupils of a class are used as scapegoats—always exhibited to visitors, and compelled to do the work that the slow pupils should do.

Bright pupils need a minimum of help in reading, the lecturer said, while slow pupils need every possible device that will enable them to pronounce words and get the idea of the sentence quickly.

To master a book is not necessarily to read it page by page, Dr. Balliet said. Every book contains, in addition to the ideas already known to the reader, but a few new ideas. To master the book is therefore to cull out the new ideas. To go over the ideas already known is waste of time.

In teaching pupils to read the effort must be made to concentrate their minds on the thought; and not on the words. While examining a window pane closely one is unable to see the beautiful landscape that may be beyond. The words are the panes, the thoughts are the landscapes. We must train children to look through the words at the thoughts.

MARTINE'S SPEECH

United States Senator Stirs New Jersey Senators With His Eloquence.

PEOPLE RULE COMMONWEALTH

Says He is Proud of the Honor Conferred on Him and Promises to Promote Welfare of the Country.

In a spirited speech delivered before the New Jersey State Senate this morning United States Senator James E. Martine, who was accorded the privilege of addressing the members through a motion made by Senator Fielder, of Hudson, said "I realize what a great honor it is to represent such a great commonwealth in the United States Senate. He spoke of the pride he felt in representing a state whose soil was wet with the rich blood of its brave men, revolutionary heroes. As senator from the State of New Jersey I trust that God may aid me to so demean myself that my acts of legislation shall advance the well-being and the welfare of our great country.

"This opportunity that you have offered me to speak in the senate of New Jersey is a stepping stone for the grander and bigger, grander only in the case of numbers and the wider extent of its jurisdiction, but no greater nor bigger in its patriotism or loyalty to the intestets of the people. In ending his speech, Mr. Martine said, "You have written on the page of the history of New Jersey, in letters of living fire 'The People Rule the Commonwealth.'"

Senator Martine made his appearance in the Senate at 11:30 o'clock and was cordially greeted by Senator Ackerman. After spending half an hour in conversation with the members of the Senate he retired.

WARREN TWP. ELECTS FOUR SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

The Circles on the Square carried its ticket and appropriation at the annual school meeting of Warren township, last night, and the opposition was completely routed. There were about 125 voters present and the meeting was one of the most exciting in recent years. Joel and Horace Coddington, and John Bornmann, township treasurer, were much in evidence, trying to elect their candidates, but they failed.

Guy D. Peck was chairman of the meeting and J. V. Brockway was the clerk. Adam Betzold, Oliver Kline and Augustus Schumacker were elected trustees for the full term and Herman Meyer was elected for the unexpired term. The appropriation, $2,600, was carried by a large majority. It was reported that during the past year the school indebtedness was reduced by $1,000. The board plans to make a number of improvements in the township schools which will require the full amount appropriated.

Consoli in Court Aagain.

When arraigned this morning charged with permitting gambling to be conducted in his former place of business on Somerset street, John Consoli changed his plea to guilty and Judge DeMeza suspended sentence. Warned a Truant.

Edward Hamilton, sixteen years old, who has time and time again been arraigned before the court on charges of truancy, was again before Judge DeMeza this morning. After a severe reprimand and threatening to send him to a reform school, Judge DeMeza discharged the boy.

Two Boys in Court.

HUNT FOR SILVER

Borrowed by Police Says Mrs. Gertrude Fenner Who Wants it Back.

SO POLICE BOARD HEARS.

The Police Regulations Go Despite a Lawyer's Opinion Mayor Moy Informs Police Chief Kiely.

The question as to what has become of three pieces of valuable silverware belonging to Mrs. Gertrude Fenner, of Ravine road, which was borrowed by the police about two years ago to assist in the identification of a quantity of similar silverware, alleged to have been stolen from Mrs. Fenner's home, is puzzling the councilmanic police board. The matter was presented at the board meeting last night, when Mayor G. W. V. Moy submitted a complaint made by Mrs. Fenner.

In the complaint, Mrs. Fenner states that she had made repeated attempts to recover the silverware loaned to the police department, but had failed. She said that she had been informed that the silverware in question was lost out of the police station. She is positive that a member of the police force secured this silverware from her, but at present not one seems to know who it was that obtained the articles.

Chief Kiely appeared before the board, by request, and when questioned about the silverware, replied: "I never sent for it and I never saw it."

The Mayor stated plainly that the matter would be fully investigated that as things now stand it is a reflection on the city which he could not allow to pass unnoticed.

Another that came before the board caused a ripple of excitement. It was in the form of a opinion from Lawyer W. A. Coddington directed to Councilman Charles C. Randolph, as chairman of the board, stating that in his opinion the releasing of prisoners upon a telephone order is a very bad practice. The opinion, it was asserted, appeared to be only a personal one, and it was not accompanied by any quotations from the law on the subject.

The Mayor stated that he could not possibly see the value of the opinion of the lawyer or any one else on the subject, and he declared that he considered the letter an insult to the board. Chief Kiely was then summoned to appear before the board.

When he arrived, the chief was questioned by the Mayor as to whether he had been informed of the resolution adopted by the board a week ago directing him to release prisoners arrested for violations of the city ordinances on telephone order. The chief replied that he had not received any such information officially, but further questioning brought out the fact that Councilman Buxton, who is chairman of the finance committee, also a member of the police board, had directed the chief to W. A. Coddington to get his opinion of the law on the question. A week ago Mr. Buxton opposed the resolution bearing on the subject.

Mayor Moy addressing Chief Kiely told him that it was not the purpose of the board to humiliate him, to detract from his authority or in any way hinder him in the administration of the law, but that when the board passed a resolution it was law so far as the government of the police department is concerned, and he would be expected to obey its provisions.

Charles Sheldon, colored, who was recently appointed a special, and Frank Parrette, an Italian, who would like to become a member of the force, appeared before the board for interrogation and general inspection. As Sheldon has not yet passed the required examination he is not eligible for a regular place, while Parrette would also be required to pass an examination, if the board decided to accept his application. Both men made a favorable impression. Nothing was done last night in the case of Thomas O'Gorman and nothing will be until another man is secured to take his place.

Standing for any length o ftime or walking any distance aggravated my trouble greatly. BASEBALL.

Manager Dooin, of the Philadelphia Nationals, closed a deal yesterday with Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Americans, for a ten-game exhibition series between the two teams in Philadelphia, beginning March 23.

PRAYED TO CATCH BALL THAT WON CHAMPIONSHIP.

"Oh, Lord, if you ever help anybody help old Bill catch that ball, and you ain't got much time to make up your mind, either!"

This is the prayer Billy Sunday, as the outfielder of Anson's world champion baseball team, prayed in one of the four games with Detroit on which the championship hinged. Rev. Mr. Sunday told the story to 7,000 men who attended his revival in an Ohio town recently.

Chicago was a run to the good in the ninth, Detroit had men on second and third, with two out. Clarkson was pitcher. His foot slipped. The ball wobbled over the plate. The batter caught it fair. It sailed for a huge crowd which lined Sunday's field. Billy dived into the crowd and caught it with his bare hand.

"Tom Johnson, the Cleveland Mayor —" Sunday went on.

"We know him, all right!" several in the crowd interrupted.

"Tom Johnson came to me and said, 'Bill, here's $10, and tomorrow I'll buy you the best hat and suit of clothes in Chicago. That catch saved me $1,500.'"

GOLF.

The latest angle in the move toward new links in the Cranford district is that the Cranford Golf Club is preparing to go it alone, instead of enjoying the co-operation of the Westfield Golf Club. Until recently the plan was to have the Cranford and Westfield golfers secure control of the Echo Lake property, but this appears to have fallen through, since Westfield made the announcement the other day that Cranford was not able to submit a proposition to Westfield more advantageous than the club already had. It is said that the Westfield Golf Club will improve its house and nine-hole course and remain where it is for an indefinite period.

The Cranford Golf Club, therefore, expects to go right along, and in all probability will utilize the present building on the Echo Lake property for a clubhouse, thereby saving something like $20,000. There is every reason to believe that a certain amount of individual aid will be received from Westfield golfers in sympathy with the new movement.

In all probability the Cranford Golf Club will shortly make a payment on the Echo Lake property, and most likely work will be started on the new course and clubhouse during the summer.

We WANT COMPETITION

of the Right Sort, Not the Following Kind!

A Mrs. S—— after selecting her outfit and learning the total cost from our plainly marked price tags, said she preferred to make comparisons elsewhere before ordering, to which we readily agreed, for it's a thing we always URGE!

On getting another store's prices (where they were marked in private signs) she found ours were far less, and SAID so. The salesman promptly dropped to our figures—AND GOT THE ORDER.

Here, where there's but ONE PLAINLY MARKED PRICE ON EVERY ITEM, such an "accommodating" and sudden price drop would be impossible—here, when you read the price tag, you KNOW it's already at lowest point, for ALL prices are made and REMAIN on the SAME UNIFORMLY SMALL PROFIT BASIS. We don't HAVE to run a "leader" here and there for an hour, or a day, to catch trade, as ALL lines are equally good values EVERY day in the year!

All we want is HONEST competition that meet OUR plainly marked prices WITH prices you can READ!

Boston, Mass., March 21.—Despite the fact that it will not go down as a record, Sam Lawrence, Harvard's crack high jumper, has the satisfaction of knowing that he has beaten the world indoor record of 6 feet 3½ inches, made in 1896 by Mike Sweeney. In practice yesterday he leaped 6 feet 3 9-16 inches.

Plainfield, N. J., March 22, 1911.

Once upon a time, the grave and reverend fathers of our city did solemnly ponder the feasibility of a municipal water supply plant.

The acute situation between the United States and Mexico prompts us to opine that the people of this land can "thank their stars" that one Theodore Roosevelt is not now President of this glorious Republic.

Just remember that "in the midst of life we are in death." When drawing your will, if you are well blessed with the world's goods, don't lose sight of the fact that the Plainfield Anti-Tuberculosis Society is a particularly worthy humanitarian institution.

Good work is being done by the police department in rounding up automobilists who "neglect" to keep their license numbers on their cars. By way of suggestion, attention might be called to the practise of some drivers in using care to see that the license numbers are covered with a deep coat of mud.

What a weight of significance can be placed on emphasizing a single word was demonstrated by Howard McSherry in his use of the word "you" at the Friendly Sons dinner at Elizabeth on Saturday night. Mr. McSheery had made a plea for "votes for women" and when one of his auditors shouted, "Oh, we don't want that!" Quick as a flash, the lawyer shot back, "Of course, YOU don't."

of Europe. Here in some places through the proper administration of milk the rate had been reduced to 2.7 per cent.

Mr. Collier spoke after the film "The Man Who Learned" had been shown in which a farmer was converted to hygienic appliances through the nearly fatal illness of his grandson caused by impure milk from his farm. He repeated the assertion that the moving picture was destined to become the leading factor in education of the future, displacing in some studies the text books now used. This would apply, he said, to biology, history, chemistry and even literature. Especially would the motion pictures make the reading of the classics a pleasure rather than drudgery for those who failed to appreciate their value.

Upwards of 400 men and women heard the speeches and apparently appreciated their import.

Mrs. George F. White, of Willow avenue, who has been quite ill, is reported to be slightly improved.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

"Othello's Apology" was the selection delivered by Miss Madeline Strader, of the publis speaking class, before the asembly yesterday morning.

From a squad of seventeen candidates for the baseball team who have been practicing for the past week, the High School team will be selected. The candidates for the team are Herbert Terry, Emile Nelson, Arthur Grislem, Ludlow Vanderventer, Antone Basone, Sidney Karr, James Nash, Monroe Good, Joseph Carty, Edward Hanrahan, William Davenport, John Ricketts, Jack Zerega, Fred Mills, Edward Hatfield, William Coyle and Russell Runyon.

Friday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock the girls basketball team will line up against the girls' team from the North Plainfield school. Plainfield won the last game played between these rivals and a chance to get even will probably be accepted by the Somerset county girls.

Under the rules governing the public speaking class of the school two selections must be presented by each of the pupils during the school year. Miss Merle Randolph made her second appearance this morning reciting the "Last Days of Pompeii," before the assembly, and Miss Susan Bennett recited "Mark Anthony's Oration." Both young women did good work.

Two debates of a series which the senior class has inaugurated have been completed. The first on reciprocity with Canada was won by the affirmative, Alfred Clarke and Gordon Moy being the upholders of President Taft's policy. As to the abolishment of capital punishment, the affirmative again won. Miss May Day and Merle Randolph carrying off the honors. Miss Ruth Weston was chairman at the first debate with Ruth Kenney as critic. Luther Banks presided at the second and Donald Webb was the judge.

Surprised J. L. Bennett.

The Thursday Night Euchre Club gave a surprise party last night to J. L. Bennett, of Watchung avenue, in honor of his birthday anniversary. The prize-winners were Mrs. Allen Coddington and Mrs. Edward Ripley for the women and W. N. Tier and E. D. Ripley for the men. The club presented Mr. Bennett with a handsome card table.

ASSAULTS REPORTER BUT ISN'T ARRESTED.

Carrol F. Sooy, a reporter for the Perth Amboy Evening News, was knocked down and badly beaten Monday night by Hugh McCardle, a local character, because of an attack made by Sooy upon McCardle in the newspaper. The assault occurred early in the evening, when there were many people on the street, but before any of them could interfere McCardle had pummeled Sooy's face brutally and had repeatedly kicked him about the head and body.

McCardle first attacked Sooy last Saturday night because of satements which the newspaper had made about Mayor Albert Bollschweiler and the police. Yesterday's issue told of that encounter, and in the article McCardle was referred to as a town bully and a loafer. A warrant was issued Monday morning by Recorder Kehoe for McCardle's arrest, but it was not served, and within a few minutes of his second attack on Sooy McCardle had crossed Staten Island Sound and was safe from arrest in Tottenville.

About two years ago, it is said, McCardle made an assault upon Walter H. Turner, who was then receiver for The Chronicle, another local paper, and escaped indictment, although he admitted making an unprovoked assault upon Turner and knocking him down.

Number 3

THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

The annual school meeting of the borough, held in the Whittier school building last night, brought out a good-sized delegation of voters. Interest centered in the $500 appropriation for manual training which was defeated last year. It was carried by a vote of 53 to 31. The remainder of the budget, $6,500 for current school expenses and $500 for building repairs was carried unanimously. The three trustees whose term expired, F. R. Wynkoop, Theodore W. Day and A. F. Bogardus, were re-elected for three year terms. They received 84 votes each. The appointment of three auditors for the coming year completed the business. The meeting was called to order by District Clerk Hamley, after which J. Newton Apgar was elected chairman and Frank Smalley secretary.

MRS. LIDIE WILKINS DIES; MANAGER OF COAST HOTEL.

Mrs. Lidie Wilkins, of Crosswicks, one of the proprietors of The Arborton, Ocean Grove, a popular summer hotel on Sea View avenue, in that place, died suddenly at Hoboken, yesterday, while visiting with her sister, Miss Anna Borton, at the home of Harry Vanderbilt. She was a daughter of Mrs. Hannah Borton, who built and managed the Arborton for many years and who died in February 1910. Mrs. Wilkins and her sister Miss Anna Borton then took up the management of the hotel and had successfully conducted it up to the present time. The house had the best reputation and was one of the most popular hotels in Ocean Grove, of which many Plainfielders were aware and they returned to the hotel from year to year.

Mrs. Wilkins was a woman of many estimable qualities, kind hearted, amiable and beloved by all who knew her and it is with sincere sorrow that her many friends in this city have heard of her sudden demise.

NEW BRUNSWICK MAN FINED FOR BEATING ROAD.

Charles S. Harkins, a former resident of New Brunswick, has been sentenced by Judge Holland, in the United States Court, at Philadelphia, to a fine of $1,000 and costs, upon an indictment charging him with having ridden from New Brunswick to Philadelphia on a ticket bearing another's name. In view of Harkins having admitted possession of the ticket and his attorney's plea for leniency on the ground that the man had already served two months in jail before his trial, Judge Holland reduced the fine to $100 and costs, the prisoner to remain in jail until same are paid.

The New Jersey Central for the past eighteen months has made endeavors to break up the practice on its lines of illegally loaning trip and commutation tickets. They find the practice is still being carried on by some and they are now sending out "spotters" to get the names of persons loaning their tickets and to prosecute all who are so doing.

THE FORUM.

Mr. Pearson's Rejoinder.

Editor, The Daily Press:

Sir: I have read attentively the communication from Mr. Liefke in your issue of the sixteenth in which he states that his sole purpose is to give me the information which I said I would like to have as to the ground impelling the petition of the business men for a reconsideration of the refusal of the Gloekler license, and it seems that Mr. Liefke signed the petition because of the fact that Mr. Gloekler was not tried in the City Court on a charge of illegally selling liquor to minors. In my former communication which evoked Mr. Liefke's reply I assumed that the City Council had satisfactory evidence of the illegal act.

I have been absent from Plainfield for some months, and still am absent, so that I rely for my knowledge of affairs upon The Daily Press. Thoroughly as I am convinced that the sale of liquor in saloons is the greatest contributing factor of our times to crime, and glad as I should be if some effective means of prohibiting such sale could be devised, my sense of justice would prevent me from counselling a refusal to renew a license on a mere unsupported rumor of a sale to minors, even in the case of a saloon on a corner, which as I said before is a peculiarly offensive location for a saloon—offensive to the advocate of temperance but desirable to the saloonkeeper.

But the Council is not bound to have the question of fact involved settled by a trial in court, and advocates of the square deal cannot justify their attitude in making such a claim. It is not the function of the Council to order an arrest—in fact that body has no power to take such a course, and it cannot be attacked nor its fairness be impeached because of the failure of the parent or guardian of the minors to whom it is alleged that liquor was sold to institute proceedings against Mr. Gloekler.

The granting or withholding of a license is by law confided to the Council, and that body may take any means it sees fit to determine the fitness of any particular applicant to engage in the business. When I say that it may take any means it sees fit, I do not mean that it should act arbitrarily, and I am not willing to believe that in the case under consideration it has so acted. Does Mr. Liefke mean to assert that the license was refused without a fair investigation by the Council of the charges? And if so, what proofs has he to substantiate his assertion? By all means let us have the full truth. But to contend that the Council should only act after a conviction in the City Court would be to leave the whole question dependent upon the law being set in operation by some one outside of its membership, and over whom it could have no control. This would be to effectually tie the hands of the Council in a most important part of its powers.

If, as I assume, the Council has acted with due consideration in this matter, it is to be hoped that hereafter in considering the applications for licenses, it will adopt the policy of never granting a license to the occupant of a corner building.

EDWARD C. PEARSON.

Commission Government.

Editor, The Daily Press:

In my opinion, the initiative referendum and recall are essential features of the "commission plan of government;" in fact, of any plan of government.

Without them, it would be possible for "selfish interests" to beat the people and secure the election of one or more of the commissioners under the "commission plan of government," but with the recall in force, these officials would have to conduct their affairs with propriety or be recalled. The disgrace a man would feel in being recalled from public office, would be so humiliating that no man would court the disapproval of the people to the extent of having them want him recalled. I take it that the commission government without the recall is a step backward both in efficiency and liberty.

My friends who feel that the initiative referendum and recall are superfluous features to the "commission plan of government," can for that reason, feel content to have those features included in the plan, or the law rather, which supplies the plan, for while we may all hope they will prove to be superfluous so far as Plainfield is concerned, yet it will satisfy those of us who feel that we should have the initiative referendum and recall and there is no doubt in my mind but what these features of the plan will exert a wholesome restraining influence.

Jail Life In Montenegro a Cheerful Sort of Existence.

Cettinje, the capital of Montenegro, possesses the most remarkable prison system in the world. The jail presents little to indicate that it is a place of confinement. There are no outer prison walls, and in the cells the men—about ten in each—are as contentedly and comfortably housed as their own personal domestic belongings can make them. Moreover, they are generously fed, and cigarettes without stint, wine occasionally and no work at all combine to check any desire to escape more effectually than would strong walls, iron bars and an army of warders. When W. J. Stillman was in that country in the seventies all the free men were away fighting, and he observed how when a messenger was wanted the official took a man out of the prison and sent him off, having no fear that he would not return. One such messenger was sent to Cattaro, in Austrian territory, with 3,000 florins for the bank and duly came back. Another asked a Russian at Cattaro to intercede with Prince Nicholas for his release from prison.

"But you are not in prison," said the Russian.

"Oh," said the man, "I have only come down for a load of skins for So-and-so, but I must go into prison again when I get back to Cettinje."

One guard watched all the prisoners when they sunned themselves out of doors, and if he were called away a prisoner would take his rifle and do duty for the time.—London Mail.

GRISTLE BREAD.

A Favorite In Norway and In Parts of Germany.

"What is gristle bread? Why, that," said a baker, "is a kind of bread that is peculiar to Norway and to some parts of Germany. In Norway it has been made for many years, and here there are bakeries in which it is made for Norwegian patrons who still prefer it wherever they may be.

"In making gristle bread the loaves when first formed up from the dough are laid on boards and put through an extra heated oven in which there is baked on them an outer crust or skin, the gristle. Then the loaves are turned over and put through the oven again, so that the gristle may be baked all over them. This quick oven makes only that outer crust on the loaves, which are then placed in another oven for their final complete baking.

"Originally in Norway gristle bread was made of rye flour only. In this country there was a demand for a handsomer and larger loaf, and wheat flour was mixed with the rye, as has now to some extent come to be the custom in Norway also. Here the proportions now used are about half and half, the result being a bigger loaf of the same weight as one of all rye.

"Gristle bread costs more than ordinary bread because of the greater time and labor required in making it."—New York Sun.

His Equivocal Answer.

The blushing girl buttonholed her flushed fiance.

"Well, Egbert," she murmured, "did papa give his consent?"

Egbert drew himself up stiffly.

"He did not commit himself either way," he responded.

"Then are we or aren't we engaged, Egby?"

"I do not know," answered Egby, still stiffly.

"But what happened?"

"This," said Egby more stiffly than ever. "I went in and said: 'Sir, I wish to marry your daughter. Have I your consent?' He turned and looked at me a minute, then he grew red in the face, then he grabbed me, then he lifted me up, then he threw me over the banisters. But whether he is in favor of our engagement or not, Ethelbrite, he did not say."

Beginning of the Drama.

The theater in the only sense that is worth considering was born in Athens. Both tragedy and comedy spring from feasts in honor of Bacchus, and as the jests and frolics were found to be out of place when introduced into graver scenes a separate province—the true drama—was formed and comedy arose. The father of the Greek comedy was Aristophanes, who had lots of fun lampooning the public men of Athens. The creator of Greek tragedy was Aeschylus, born B. C. 525. In sublimity Aeschylus has never been surpassed. He is to the drama what Phidias and Michelangelo are to art.—New York American.

The Irony of Fate.

"What is your understanding of the irony of fate?" asked the bashful young man.

"Well," the beautiful girl replied, "if two fellows should fight over me and I shouldn't get into the papers I should think that was about it."—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Similarity.

"Oh, mamma, come here and look at this anaemic horse! He's just as white as he can be!"—Judge.

Quarrelsome.

Polly—I never knew such a quarrelsome girl as Molly. Dolly—That's right. Half the time she isn't on speaking terms with her own conscience.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Fair Supposition.

The Lady—And is your father working, my little man? The Little Man—I s'pose so, mum. The judge said 'ard labor.—London Telegraph.

THE DIVA'S RUBY

CHAPTER I.

There is a ruby mine hidden in the heart of the mountains near a remote little city of central Asia, unknown to European travelers; and the secret of the treasure belongs to the two chief families of the place, and has been carefully guarded for many generations, handed down through the men from father to son; and often the children of these two families have married, yet none of the women ever learned the way to the mine from their fathers, or their brothers, or their husbands, none excepting one only, and her name was Baraka, which may perhaps mean "Blessed;" but no blessing came to her when she was born. She was much whiter and much more beautiful than the other girls of the little Tartar city; her face was oval like an ostrich egg, her skin was as the cream that rises on sheep's milk at evening, and her eyes were like the Pools of Peace in the Valley of Dark Moons; her waist also was a slender pillar of ivory, and round her ankle she could make her thumb meet her second finger; as for her feet, they were small and quick and silent as young mice. But she was not blessed.

When she was in her seventeenth year a traveler came to the little city, who was not like her own people; he was goodly to see, and her eyes were troubled by the sight of him, for the stranger was tall and very fair, and his beard was like spun gold, and he feared neither man nor evil spirit, going about alone by day and night. Furthermore, he was a great physician, and possessed a small book, about the size of a man's hand, in which was contained all the knowledge of the world. By means of this book, and three small buttons that tasted of mingled salt and sugar, he cured Baraka's father of a mighty pain in the midriff which had tormented him a whole week. He brought with him also a written letter from a holy man to the chiefs of the town; therefore they did not kill him, though he had a good Mauser revolver with ammunition, worth much money, and other things useful to believers.

Satan entered the heart of Baraka, and she loved the traveler who dwelt in her father's house, for she was not blessed; and she stood before him in the way when he went out, and when he returned she was sitting at the door watching, and she took care to show her cream-white arm and her slender ankle, and even her beautiful face when neither her father nor her mother was near. But he saw little and cared less, and was as grave as her father and the other graybeards of the town.

When she perceived that he was not moved by the sight of her, she watched him more closely; for she said in her girl's heart that the eyes that are blind to a beautiful woman see one of three things: Gold, or power, or heaven; but her sight was fixed only on him. Then her throat was dry, her heart fluttered in her maiden breast like a frightened bird, and sometimes, when she would have tried to speak, she felt as if her tongue were broken and useless; the fire ran lightly along her delicate body, her eyes saw nothing clearly, and a strange rushing sound filled her ears; and then, all at once, a fine dew wet her forehead and cooled it, and she trembled all over and was as pale as death—like Sappho, when a certain god-like man was near. Yet the stranger saw nothing, and his look was bright and cold as a winter's morning in the mountains.

Almost every day he went out and climbed the foothills, and when the sun was lowering he came back bringing herbs and flowers, which he dried carefully and spread between leaves of gray paper in a large book; and he wrote spells beside them in an unknown tongue, so that no one dared to touch the book when he went out, lest the genii should wake and come out from between the pages, to blind the curious and strike the gossips dumb, and cast a leprosy on the thief. At night he lay on the roof of the forehouse beside the gate of the court, because it was cool there. Baraka came to him, before midnight, when her mother was in a deep sleep; she knelt at his side while he slept in the starlight, and she laid her head beside his, on the sack that was his pillow, and for a little while she was happy, being near him, though he did not know she was there. But presently she remembered that her mother might wake and call her, and she spoke very softly, close to his ear, fearing greatly lest he should start from his sleep and cry out.

"The ruby mine is not far off," she said. "I know the secret place. Rubies! Rubies! Rubies! You shall have as many as you can carry of the blood-red rubies!"

He opened his eyes, and even in the starlight they were bright and cold. She stroked his hand softly and then pressed it a little.

"Come with me and you shall know the great secret," she whispered. "You shall fill this sack that is under your head, and then you shall take me with you to Egypt, and we will live in a marble palace and have many slaves, and be always together. For you will always remember that it was Baraka who showed you where the rubies were, and even when you are tired of her you will treat her kindly and feed her with fig paste and fat quails, such as I hear they have in the south all winter, and Frank rice, and coffee that has been picked over, bean by bean, for the great men."

She said all this in a whisper, stroking his hand; and while she whispered he smiled in his great golden beard that seemed as silvery in the starlight as her father's.

"That is women's talk," he answered. "Who has seen mines of rubies? And if you know where they are, why should you show them to me? You are betrothed. If you had knowledge of hidden treasures you would keep it for your husband. This is some trick to destroy me."

"May these hands wither to the wrists if a hair of your head be harmed through me," she answered; and as she knelt beside him, the two little hands held his face towards her very tenderly, and then one of them smoothed the thick hair back from his forehead.

"You are betrothed," he repeated, "and I am your father's guest. Shall I betray him?"

"I care nothing, neither for father, nor mother, nor brothers, nor betrothed," Baraka answered. "I will give you the riches of Solomon if you will take me, for I will have no other man."

"There are no rubies," said the stranger. "Show them to me and I will believe."

The girl laughed very low, and took from her neck a bag of antelope skin, no larger than her closed hand, and gave it to him with the thin thong by which it had hung.

"When you have seen them in the sun you will want others," she said. "I will take you to the place, and when you have filled your sack with them you will love me enough to take me away. It is not far to the place. In two hours we can go and come. To-morrow night, about this time, I will wake you again. It will not be safe to unbar the door, so you must let me down from this roof by a camel rope, and then follow me."

When Baraka was gone the stranger sat up on his carpet and opened the small bag to feel the stones, for he knew that he could hardly see them in the starlight; but even the touch and the weight told him something, and he guessed that the girl had not tried to deceive him childishly with bits of glass. Though the bag had been in her bosom, and the weather was hot, the stones were as cold as jade; and moreover he felt their shape and knew at once that they might really be rough rubies, for he was well versed in the knowledge of precious stones.

When the day began to dawn he went down from the roof to the common room of the fore-house, where guests were quartered, yet although there was no other stranger there he would not take the bag from his neck to examine the stones, lest some one should be watching him from a place of hiding; but afterwards, when he was alone in the foothills and out of sight of the town, searching as usual for new plants and herbs, he crept into a low cave at noon, and sat down just inside the entrance, so that he could see any one coming while still a long way off, and there he emptied the contents of the little leathern wallet into his hand, and saw that Baraka had not deceived him; and as he looked closely at the stones in the strong light at the entrance of the cave, the red of the rubies was reflected in the blue of his bright eyes, and made a little purple glare in them that would have frightened Baraka; and he smiled behind his great yellow beard.

He took from an inner pocket a folded sheet on which a map was traced in black and green ink, much corrected and extended in pencil; and he studied the map thoughtfully in the cave while the great heat of the day lasted; but the lines that his eye followed did not lead towards Persia, Palestine, and Egypt, where Baraka wished to live with him in a marble palace and eat fat quails and fig paste.

She came to him again that night on the roof, bringing with her a small bundle, tightly rolled and well tied up. He wrapped his blanket round her body, and brought it up under her arms so that the rope should not hurt her when her weight came upon it, and so he let her down over the edge of the roof to the ground, and threw the rope after her; and he let himself over, holding by his hands, so that when he was hanging at the full length of his long arms he had only a few feet to drop, for he wished to take the rope with him.

Baraka's house was at the head of the town, towards the foothills; every one was sleeping, and there was no moon. She followed the stony sheep-track that struck into the hills only a few hundred paces from the last houses, and the stranger followed her closely. He had his sack on his shoulder, his book of plants and herbs was slung behind him by a strap, and in his pockets he had all the money he carried for his travels and his letters to the chiefs, and a weapon; but he had left all his other belongings, judging them to be of no value compared with a camel's bag full of rubies, and only a hindrance, since he would have to travel far on foot before daylight, by dangerous paths.

The girl trod lightly and walked fast, and as the man followed in her footsteps he marked the way turn by turn, and often looked up at the stars overhead as men do who are accustomed to journeying alone in desert places. For some time Baraka led him through little valleys he had often traversed, and along hillsides familiar to him, and at last she entered a narrow ravine which he had once followed to its head, where he had found it ended abruptly in a high wall of rock, at the foot of which there was a clear pool that did not overflow. It was darker in the gorge, but the rocks were almost white, so that it was quite possible to see the way by the faint light.

The man and the girl stood before the pool; the still water reflected the stars.

"This is the place," Baraka said. "Do you see anything?"

"I see water and a wall of rock," the man answered. "I have been here alone by day. I know this place. There is nothing here, and there is no way up the wall."

Baraka laughed softly.

"The secret could not have been kept by my fathers for 14 generations if it were so easy to find out," she said. "The way is not easy, but I know it."

"Lead," replied the traveler. "I will follow."

"No," returned girl. "I will go a little way down the gorge and watch, while you go in."

The man did not trust her. How could he tell but that she had brought him to an ambush where he was to be murdered for the sake of his money and his good weapon? The rubies were real, so far as he could tell, but they might be only a bait. He shook his head.

"Listen," said Baraka. "At the other side of the pool there is a place where the water from this spring flows away under the rock. That is the passage."

"I have seen the entrance," answered the traveler. "It is so small that a dog could not swim through it."

"It looks so. But it is so deep that one can walk through it easily, with one's head above water. It is not more than 50 steps long. That is how I found it, for one day I wandered here alone in the morning for shade, when the air was like fire; and being alone I bathed in the clear pool to cool myself, and I found the way and brought back the stone, which I have hidden ever since. For if my father and brothers know that I have seen the treasure they will surely kill me, because the women must never learn the secret. You see," she laughed a little, "I am the first of us who has known it, since many generations, and I have already betrayed it to you! They are quite right to kill us when we find it out!"

"That Is the Passage."

This Boiler is a Coal Saver

Why? Because it is a BOYNTON and has the BOYNTON square fire pot, which increases fire surface about 25% over other boilers of like diameter.

The BOYNTON "square pot" is the greatest improvement yet devised in heating systems. It is square at the corners, hence clears free of cinders and ash each time the grate is turned. That means a live fire, always, and plenty of draft. See your dealer about the

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

Next Saturday matinee and night at the Plainfield theatre will be a gala event among amusement seekers, the occasion being the first presentation in this city of "The Wolf," the latest play of Eugene Walter, which created such a furore in New York and Chicago, where it enjoyed long runs. "The Wolf" is said to be strong in conception, dramatic in execution and vitally interesting throughout. It tells a story of the wonderful Hudson Bay country and of the primal, eternal struggle between men for the possession of a woman. Dark passion and pure sentiment are set in opposition, but there is nothing hackneyed. The man are not of the familiar stage type, nor are the scenes of a mechanical order.

The attraction at the Plainfield theatre next Tuesday night, March 28, will be Lillian Russell in her new comedy, "In Search of a Sinner." It is in three acts and was written by Charlotte Thompson with Lillian Russell in mind as the heroine of her comedy. Miss Thompson has been successful in creating a role that presents Lillian Russell as a comedienne without peer, and at the same time has built up a unique and appealing play. This extremely happy combination explains why Miss Russell has won such sure success with the new piece.

Proctor's Variety Show.

The sensation at Proctor's theatre last night was caused by a fellow-townsman, who for modesty's sake does not want his name used. He made his debut in the role of the ancient Roman Casius in which Jas. and Sadie Leonard present "When Caesar C's Her," one of the most amusing sketches yet presented. The Five Stunning Empire Girls do an excellent singing and dancing act in elaborate costumes; Williams and Rogers offer a dramatic sketch entitled "Tricked," and Herman K. Seitz, monologuist and singer, is exceptionally clever.

Mrs. H. B. Coombs, of Madison avenue and West Eighth street, is detained at home by a serious illness and a trained nurse is in attendance.

The Safe Deposit and Storage accommodations offered by this Company are not surpassed in the State of New Jersey. Boxes are for rent at from $5.00 per year and trunks of silver and other valuables in bulk may be stored for from 50 cents per month.

Travelers' cheques for the convenient carriage of funds are sold here and are accepted everywhere.

DESCRIBED BATTLE

Lieut. Wilson Vividly Pictured Gettysburg, Civil War's Decisive Conflict.

SCENES MOVED VETERANS.

Mayor Moy Compliments Hope Chapel Boys' Club Under Whose Auspices the Lecture was Given.

Before an audience of upwards of 400 people including seventy-four members of the Hope Chapel Boys' Club, Lieut. L. F. Wilson, head master of the Finderne Military Academy, lectured on "The Battle of Gettysburg" in a manner to bring forth enconiums from several veterans of the Civil War in the audience. The lecture was illustrated with some stirring stereopticon views which vividly brought to the mind of some of the participants of the battle who were present the dreadful three days of warfare and what were known as bloodiest of the Rebellion.

The events leading up to the great battle, the mobilizing of the two great armies, the maneuvres so accurately executed, were all thrown upon the screen with a realism which sent the blood running through the veins with increased vigor, impelled by the aroused patriotism of the audience. Lieut. Wilson's description of the battle was intensely interesting and caused occasional gasps of astonishment.

At the conclusion of the address, S. R. Struthers, a veteran, and member of the G. A. R., arose and after complimenting the speaker upon his splendid address and for the part he is taking in teaching the art of manly self control and military tactics to the youths at his academy. Mayor Moy complimented the boys upon their club and their successful entertainment.

Charles G. August, leader of the club, heard a motion for extending the thanks of the club to Lieut. Wilson, but before another member of the club could second the motion, Chief T. O. Doane, himself a veteran of the war, arose and asked permission from the chair to not only second the motion but to add the thanks and appreciation of the veterans to that of the club for the splendid entertainment they had enjoyed. With this the motion was unanimously carried.

Mitchell's orchestra entertained the gathering before and after the lecture with some fine selections and John Todd sang "Tennessee." The members of the club had charge of the evening's events, the president, Harold Eckert, acting as master of ceremonies and introducing the speakers. The others on the committee were Freddie Duncan, John Grindley, William Conrad, Peter Cowley, Russell Thomas, Arthur Louden, Thomas Mendell, Aaron Schlick, W. Ross, Harold Ackerman and Fred Segrist. A good sum was realized for the club treasury.

THE SENATE ADOPTS LOCAL OPTION BILL.

Senator Gebhardt's amendment to the local option bill, extending local option to municipalities as well as counties was adopted in the State Senate Tuesday. Senator Osborne spoke against the amendment to the bill that holds a minor guilty for representing himself as twenty-one to obtain intoxicating liquor. The amendment made the penalty a fine of $25, instead of holding the guilty for a misdemeanor.

Lenten Musical Service.

The choir of the First Baptist church, under the direction of Howard Case, choirmaster and organist, will give a musical Lenten service on Thursday evening, April 13, when it will render Maunder's cantata, "Olivet to Calvary," and other selections. The solo part will be taken by Miss Ruth Harris, soprano; Miss Hazel Hatfield, contralto; William Holmes, baritone and George Smith, tenor.

At Salvation Army.

At the mid-week meeting at the Congregational church last evening, several members of the Salvation Army took part in the services, including Captain and Mrs. A. S. Hewitt and Eddie Brun, the latter singing his famous song "Halleujah Sand." Other members of the Army testified and altogether the meeting was one of spiritual uplift to all who attended.

C. E. Union Congress.

The March congress of the Plainfield Christian Endeavor Union will be held tonight in Y. M. C. A. Hall. The purpose of the meeting will be to arouse interest in the coming international convention to be held at Atlantic City at which it is expected that President Taft will make an address.

PLAN ANOTHER COURT FOR LOCAL FORESTERS

Plans are about complete for the institution of a new Court of Independent Order Foresters in this city, the charter membership at present being forty-five. The new court is being organized by former members of Court Watchung. A preliminary meeting will be held Monday night, which time the date of the institution will be fixed and the name for the court chosen. The comittee in charge of the new court will recommend to the instituting officer, a list of officers to serve for the balance of the year.

This will make three courts of this order in the city, the present two being Courts Plainfield and Watchung. Each has a large membership and for this reason it is thought that there is room enough here for a third court. The institution will take place on or about April 1, and the high court officers will be invited to be present.

PARK AVE. BAPTISTS HOLD ANNUAL SESSION

That the Park Avenue Baptist church is in a better condition financially and spiritually than ever before in its existance was the opinion expressed last evening at the annual church meeting after the reports of the various departments, officers and societies had been read. The feeling throughout the membership is one of optimism and the future is bright. This condition of affairs is due in a large measure to the present pastor, Rev. Gabriel Reid Maguire, according to one of the members present.

E. F. Dorman, who has been clerk of the church for several years, was unanimously elected to succeed himself in that position. Deacons W. M. Tallman and Isaac R. Giles were re-elected and Lewis R. Schofield, John H. Doane, and Americus L. Hellyer were elected to the deaconry of the church. A committee on resolutions was appointed to draw up suitable regrets on the removal by death of Deacon Theodore I. Runyon.

There were about seventy-five members present and the meeting was presided over by the pastor. O. Jasper Sims was elected treasurer of the church's benevolent fund, but no figures were given out as to the amount disbursed during the year.

MARTINE BESIEGED BY FAVOR SEEKERS

United States Senator James E. Martine is able to be out again and declares he is rapidly regaining his strength lost during his long illness. He expects to go to Washington on April 1,a few days before the opening of the extraordinary session of Congress, and will occupy the seat assigned to him in the Senate. For the present, Senator and Mrs. Martine will occupy a suite of rooms at the New Willard and later on they will secure other quarters during their sojourn at the Capitol city.

Senator Martine is already learning that his high office is not all pleasure, despite his love for politics. During his enforced confinement at home, he was sought every day by delegations and numerous committees representing various organizations, political and otherwise, seeking favors at his hand. Some days he was almost exasperated to the breaking point by the importunities of his callers, especially those who wanted him to see that certain persons were appointed as postmasters in different localities.

Mr. Martine informed these delegations that if President Taft would place the power of appointment in his hands he would settle the matter promptly and without any undue ceremony, but perhaps, fortunately for all concerned, the President would retain that privilege for the present at least.

The Senator seemed to be especially annoyed at several delegations of women who were very insistent in their demands for his support in behalf of women's suffrage. Mr. Martine has never been particularly strong about giving suffrage to women, and it is safe to say that the women callers were not given much encouragement from Mr. Martine in the interest of their cause.

Stoned Dining Car.

While the 6:45 B. & O. express was passing through this city last evening someone threw a stone at a car. The missile crashed through a window of the dining car narrowly missing an occupant of one of the tables. No clue could be obtained by the police as to who threw the stone, but suspicion rests upon a certain boy in the West End.

ADROIT THIEVERY

Small Boys Baffled the Police by Skillful Operations at Grocery Store.

AS CLEVER AS PROFESSIONALS.

William, August and John Garrison to Be Arraigned Before Judge DeMeza Tomorrow Morning.

Thieves who have baffled the police and Lawrence Kerwin, a grocer, of West Third street, for the past six months were caught yesterday by Detective Sergeant Flynn after one of their most flagrant and successful raids upon the stock of the groceryman. The burglars proved to be three small boys, William, August and John Garrison, sons of William Garrison, whose apartments are just over the store. The oldest of the three is but fourteen. They will be arraigned before Judge William G. DeMeza in the city court tomorrow morning.

According to the detective the boys had burrowed a tunnel from the rear of the house until they arrived at a convenient spot under the store floor. Here with the aid of a brace and bit they had honeycomed the flooring until a section four feet by two feet could be lifted up and when the packages of flour, sugar and other needful stuff was safely outside they could replace the flooring and leave the place undetected by the proprietor.

Mr. Kerwin has known for months that the thefts were going on but had no idea how entrance to his place was obtained as there were no signs ever left of the ingress and exit of the youthful marauders.

AUTO FIRE ENGINE ON EXIBITION HERE

Mayor Moy was somewhat surprised shortly after noon today when a delegation of citizens from Carteret (Roosevelt) came whizzing up to his front door on an autombile fire engine manned by the citizens of the town for which the apparatus was purchased.

Under the control of Emil Wilhelm, who claims to be the only real fire extinguisher in Roosevelt, or Carteret, the whole fire and water committee of that progressive town went bowling through the streets shortly before 1 o'clock this afternoon and so proud of their machine were they that they insisted upon being accompanied on their ramble by Chief T. O. Doane, with Captain Jennings bringing up the fine points of the machine from a rear standpoint.

The citizens of Carteret are proud of their new machine, for as Robert Jeffries, chairman of the board, said: "We are looking for the best there is and nothing but the best will satisfy our people." Henry Heil, Geo. Morgan, W. H. Nash, Adolph Graham and Otto Staubach, all advocates of the better science in fire fighting, are enthusiastic in their new possession and they believe that in emulating the example set by Chief Croker, of New York that they are going to induce the other municipalities like the city of Plainfield to urge upon the Common Council the need for a machine of equal potency in fighting fire.

DISTRICT COURT CASES GROWING IN NUMBER.

Among the forty-two cases called before Judge William Newcorn in the district court this morning, only one was brought to trial and this resulted in a peculiar finish. Caroline Wormser sued Gustave to replevin a watch and chain and finally J. W. Welch asked for a voluntary nonsuit which was granted. Francis J. Blatz appeared for Mrs. Wormser.

Seven suits were decided on proof and six or more landlord and tenant cases, uncontested, were decided in favor of the plaintiffs. There were a large number of spectators in court awaiting procedure in cases which had been postponed.

Wireless Association Banquet.

At the first banquet of the Wireless Association of New eJrsey which will be held in Y. M. C. A. hall tomorrow evening A. B. Cole, a noted writer on wireless subjects will address the boys. It is expected that Mayor George W. V. Moy will adress the diners. The banquet begins at 8 o'clock sharp.

Kennel Club to Meet.

The Plainfield Kennel Club will hold a special meeting at Truell Hall Saturday evening at 8 o'clock, at which time the question of holding the annual bench show and other matters of importance will be considered.

AIDING PHYSICIANS

C. T. Pomeroy Engaged as Bacteriologist on Health Board Staff.

TO DO RESEARCH WORK.

He is a Graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Technology—Successor to C. L. LoMont.

The Board of Health is now ready to do research work and the physicians of the city have been notified that on and after March 24, the board will be prepared to examine cultures at its laboratory in the City National Bank building, 104 East Front street. This arrangement is made for the convenience of the physicians to facilitate prompt diagnosis, but it is not compulsory. Results of the examination may be obtained by noon of the day following, if specimens are delivered to the laboratory before 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

C. T. Pomeroy, of Lewiston, Me., a bacteriologist, and recent graduate of the Massachussets Institute of Technology, is now in the employ of the board, succeeding C. L. LaMont, who resigned to take another position in this city. Mr. Pomeroy will be assistant to Health Officer John O'Brien, also being a sanitary expert. In the past the physicians here have been obliged to send disease cultures to Trenton for examination, but the action of the Board of Health overcomes this difficulty and save time.

The Board of Health has also issued a notice to all dealers in fruits, vegetables and other food products, calling their attention to the requirements of the notice served on them last year in regard to the proper protection of food products from flies, dust, dirt and contamination. During fly season dealers will be required to take special precautions against the possibility of flies having access to unwrapped or otherwise unprotected foods.

The board has given emphasis to former instructions that these foodstuffs must be covered with a fly netting so arranged that it will not touch any part of the food. After April 1 this requirement will be strictly enforced.

MUST EARN 50 CENTS TO PAY CITY AS FINE

Michael Shapiro, fourteen years old, who has been arraigned before Judge DeMeza in the city court on several occasions for misconduct of a variety of kinds, was up again this morning charged with trying to force his way into the addition being built on the City National Bank on Park avenue last evening. He was fined fifty cents by Judge DeMeza and will have to earn the money by April 1.

According to Edward Tucker, janitor at the bank, the boy had been warned to stay away from the door, but he persisted in trying to force his way in until Tucker put him out on the sidewalk. Shapiro then bombarded the door with stones and pieces of iron and continued in this conduct until arrested.

LODGE CELEBRATES ITS 23RD ANNIVERSARY

Unity Lodge, No. 102, Knights of Pythias, celebrated its twenty-eighth anniversary last night in its rooms, 212 West Front street, by giving an euchre, and an informal entertainment. The affair was largely attended there being more than one hundred members and friends present.

During the forepart of the evening there wis an excellent entertainment, comprising vocal solos by Harold Leadbitter, accompanied on the piano by Miss Beulah VanWinkle; piano solos by Miss VanWinkle and a talk on "Pythian Fraternalism," by W. D. Quick, of Somerville, grand vice-chancellor of the order.

The rest of the evening was devoted to playing euchre. Mrs. George Townley and Mrs. A. E. Causbrook won the prizes for the women and William Powelson, of Bound Brook, and William Johnson, of this city, for the men. Refreshments were served after the play. The committee in charge comprised Jeremiah VanWinkle, Charles W. DeGraw, J. F. Sheppard, assisted by Frank Putnam, A. B. Drake and Raymond Giles. Unity Lodge has a membership of ninety-four, which is constantly growing. The present chancellor commander is I. N. Wylie.

TEACHERS HAPPY

Board of Education Raises Their Salaries to a Maximun of $1,000.

INCREASE $50 EACH YEAR.

Property-Owners in Vicinity of Kensington and Prospect Avenues Object to Proposed School Building.

School Budget.

The Board of Education met at the Plainfield High School last evening for the purpose of discussing the budget for the year. No action was taken. President Leander N. Lovell and Floyd T. Woodhull were not present, the former because of illness.

One or two matters which had been under consideration for some time came up for the action of the board last night, among them the matter of teachers' salaries. After some discussion it was agreed to raise the pay of teachers until they meet the maximum salary of $1,000 per year, this increase to be gradual by sums of $50 until the maximum is reached.

This action was taken after mature deliberation and is a concession to the prevailing opinion among the teachers themselves that their efficiency is worthy of recognition.

Another thing which rather staggered the board was a protest from residents of Prospect and Kensington avenues against the erection of a school building in that neighborhood. The protests were represented by Garret W. Frech, of Prospect avenue. This matter will be taken up later.

MOY TO INVESTIGATE MINING PROPOSITIONS

Aiming to rid Plainfield of sauve individuals who unload alleged worthless stocks, particularly of the mining variety, Mayor G. W. V. Moy will begin an investigation of the promoters and their alleged get-rich-quick schemes. He says as soon as he gets satisfactory evidence of bogus stock sales he will ask the co-operation of the postoffice department at Washington, and he added that not until he got a report from that source as to some concerns and agents he has in mind will be take any formal action.

"My attention has been drawn to the operations of these so called get-rich-quick concerns, which get the money of the credulous by glib-tongued individuals who seem to live high and to have no difficuty in marketing their wares," said Mayor Moy today, when approached by a reporter for The Daily Press. "As you are aware no doubt mining stocks are the worst form of this traffic for the majority of those unlisted are practically worth not more than the certificates issued. I consider these 'Wallingfords' a public menace and if I can make out a case against any of them I will be simply doing my duty in protecting the unwary from throwing their hard earned savings to the winds. For years I have been opposed to this sort of business and have always desired to stop it. I know of one man who owns a block of mining stocks a foot thick and they are absolutely worthless. My attention has been called to them repeatedly and I have always done what I could to prevent their sale."

PLAINFIELD COUNTRY CLUB PLANS TO INCREASE DUES.

The Plainfield Country Club will hold a special meeting at the Hartridge Auditorium this evening, to vote on the question of increasing the dues of active members $5, and to provide that women who become members chiefly for the social privileges of the club, shall join as associate members, abolishing the junior associate class. It is proposed to charge only $6 a year for children under fourteen years of age. Women who join as associates will, of course, have the privileges of the athletic grounds of the club.

The reason for increasing the dues of active members is to give the club a sufficient surplus in income to make a number of needed improvements, without issuing any more bonds. The improvements would cost about $2,000 and could be made at once so that the members would get the benefit during the coming season.

Will Hold Class Initiation.

Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., at its meeting tonight will entertain the members of the Elizabeth Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., and the latter's initiatory team will initiate a class of candidates. After the work the local council will serve refreshments.

MRS. MARTIN CRONCE DIED THIS MORNING

Mrs. Martin Cronce, aged about fifty years, of Essex street, died at noon today, following a long illness from a complication of diseases. She had been confined to her bed for a month. Mrs. Cronce had lived in Plainfield practically all her life. She possessed many excellent qualities for which she was admired by a large number of friends and acquaintances. She was a member of the First Baptist church.

Mrs. Crone is survived by a husband and four daughters, the Misses Mabel, Edna, Hazel and Violet, all living home; also by her mother, Mrs. Henry Mohring, of West Fifth street; two brothers, former Councilman Herman Weber and August Weber; one sister, Miss Alma A. Weber, a trained nurse; also a half-brother, Louis Mohring, of Jersey City, and a half-sister, Mrs. Charles Wilson, of Plainfield.

WOMEN'S MISSIONARY MEETING TOMORROW

The Women's National Foreign Missionary jubilee, which is to be held tomorrow afternoon and evening at Trinity Reformed church, promises to be a large and enthusiastic gathering. Forty-five church congregations in and around this city have been invited to unite in these services and well known speakers have been secured for both sessions.

The list of speakers includes Mrs. Helen M. Montgomery, president of the Long Island Women's Missionary Association; Dr. Mary Carlton, of Frochow, China; both of whom will address the gathering in the afternoon, and Rev. Lewis R. Scudder, of India, and Miss Seaman, of the Philippine Islands, in the evening.

In addition to the singing led by a chorus choir of young women from the several city churches there will be special music in the evening by the Trinity church quartet choir.

The afternoon session, presided over by Mrs. James R. Joy, will be for women, while the evening session at which Mrs. Frederick G. Mead will preside, will be for both men and women. Young people are especially invited to be present. The afternoon session begins at 3 o'clock and the evening at 8 o'clock.

MUST STOP BURNING RUBBISH IN STREETS

Burning rubbish in the streets is a violation of the new ordinance and as many of the people appear to be ignorant of the fact Judge William G. DeMeza has asked that the newspapers of the city make it known through their columns.

This morning Herman Semmer, of Lee place; John Richardson, of Muhlenberg place and West Third street, and Charles Bogel, of Muhlenberg place, were all arraigned on charges of violating this ordinance, but in view of the fact that they did not know of the new law sentence was suspended in each case.

The ordinance is one that especially at this time of year should be scrupulously observed owing to the liability of burning fragments igniting buildings through being carried by the wind. The police are unusually active in this respect and all offenders caught will be haled before the court. It is not at all likely that all will escape without penalty being exacted.

PURCHASE TEAM FOR EAST END FIRE HOUSE.

The Councilmanic fire and building committee has purchased a fine team of grey horses for use at the East End engine house. The team was secured from Fisk, Dorr & Carroll, of New York city, and cost $650. They stand about fifteen hands and are pronounced to be perfectly sound and well suited for the work of pulling the heavy apparatus to fires. The horses arrived last night. They are western bred and not yet acclimated, but this will be overcome within a short time.

Yum! Yum!

The Young Women's Mission Band of Trinity Reformed church will give a chicken salad and oyster supper in the lecture room of the church on Tuesday evening, March 28. The committee in charge is now busily engaged in completing the details for the affair, which promises to be a successful one.

Mrs. Caroline Olmstead and Mrs. Joseph Sutphen, of Long Branch, have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. P. I. Minton, of East Fifth street.

NEW MASONIC HALL

Members of the Craft Consider Gloekler Corner as Site for Temple.

LODGE INSTITUTED HERE

Idea of Promoters is to Have Structure Completed in Time for 100th Anniversary Celebration of Jerusalem Lodge.

The failure of Christian Gloekler to secure a renewal of a liquor license for his saloon at West Front and Somerset streets, may result in the erection of one of the finest Masonic Temples in this section of the country. Although the proposition has only been discussed in an informal way by several prominent members of the fraternity here, it has met with such hearty approval, that it is not at all unlikely that it may become a reality.

The fact that Mr. Gloekler did not get his license this year and that there is little prospect of the corner ever again being licensed as a saloon, brought about the advisability of the Masonic lodges of the city purchasing the property, demolishing the old buildings and in their place erect a modern structure, that would be an ornament to the city.

The plan as discussed by the Masons would be to put up a building, reserving the top floor for the use of the several Masonic lodges, the ground floor for stores and other floors for offices, which could face on Front street and Somerset street as well.

Those who are enthusiastic over the proposition would like to see the property purchased at once so that the building could be completed before 1918, at which time the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Masonry in this city will be celebrated. Jerusaem Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., was instituted about where Mr. Gloekler's buildings now stand and it would be singularly appropriate to erect a Masonic Temple there.

It is understood that Mr. Gloekler has been approached on the subject, and being a Mason affiliated with a German Lodge in Newark, thinks well of the proposition. No doubt he will be asked to fix a price on the property so that if it is decided to consider the matter further the different Masonic lodges will have something definite to consider.

One prominent member of Jerusalem Lodge in speaking of the matter today, said that if it was decided to erect a temple at Front and Somerset streets, the structure would be one of the finest and most complete in this section of the country, and would be fully equipped with all modern conveniences, including an elevator.

People's B. & L. Association.

At the regular meeting of the People's Building & Loan Association, held in the office of the president, Ira L. LaRue, on North avenue, Tuesday evening, reports of the secretary showed that 350 shares of the first issue had been subscribed and that indications pointed to a rapid closing up of the series. The date set for closing the series is April 18 next.

Louis K. Hyde, of Mountain avenue, has returned home from Belleair, Florida, where he has been sojourning for several months.

SUIT AGAINST BROTHER EXCITES MUCH INTEREST

Westfield, March 22.—The two suits recently instituted by Mrs. R. H. Collins against the estate of Benjamin F. Ham, of which her brother, Frank B. Ham, of Westfield, is the executor, in which she seeks to obtain an interest in the Ham homestead, at Cranford, and also a number of railroad bonds, which it is alleged, her father gave her at different times, is exciting much interest.

Mrs. Collins, before her marriage, was Miss Julia Ham, and resided at Cranford. According to her husband, they were married against her father's wishes in Westfield on July 21, 1909, by Rev. Dr. A. W. Hayes, pastor of the First Methodist church.

As explained to a reporter by Mr. Collins, one suit which is brought in the Court of Chancery, is to set aside a deed made by Mrs. Collins before her marriage, and at the time of the death of her mother, Mrs. Benjamin Ham, about three years ago. The deed conveyed her share of the property, known as the Ham homestead, to her mother. When the latter died the property went to Benjamin F. Ham, who, Mr. Collins claims, had only a life right in it. The property, according to Mr. Collins, is valued at $16,000 in the inventory of the estate.

The suit in the Circuit Court of Union County, according to Mr. Collins, is for the purpose of recovering railroad bonds which Mrs. Collins' father gave her at various times and which her brother, F. B. Ham, the executor, has refused to turn over.

Asked as to the reason of Mr. Ham's refusal to turn over the bonds, Mr. Collins claims that Mr. Ham has declared there was no record of the bonds being given to Mrs. Collins and there was no reason why he should turn them over to her. The value of the bonds is put at $10,000 by Mr. Collins.

Mr. Ham, when seen by a reporter, Tuesday, refused to talk on the impending suit. Mrs. Collins is represented by Raymond T. Parrot, of Elizabeth. Former Governor Foster M. Voorhees is attorney for the estate.

NEW BILLS FOR MAYOR'S CLERK AND PLAYGROUNDS.

Following the veto by Governor Wilson of a bill designed to increase the pay of John J. Gilroy, Mayor's clerk in Newark, to not more than $1,800, a substitute bill was introduced Monday night by Senator Osborne providing that the salaries of Mayor's clerks in first-class cities shall be fixed by resolution by the board having charge of the finances of the city.

Only three other bills were introduced Monday night. They were as follows:

Mr. Osborne (by request). To authorize the appointment in any city, town, township, borough, village or other municipality a board of commissioners of playgrounds, consisting of not more than five citizens, without compensation, having power to acquire lands by gift, purchase or lease, for playgrounds and approaches thereto, and to appoint secretary and clerk and a sufficient number of supervisors and assistants for playgrounds and determine their salaries, and to authorize the raising of all necessary expenses by taxation or the issuance of bonds to run not less than thirty or more than fifty years.

Mr. Johnson. To authorize the Erie Railroad to improve the navigation of Berry's Creek, Bergen county, by the construction of a suitable canal and the maintenance of a fixed bridge in place of the drawbridge over said creek, where the main line of the Erie Railroad crosses said creek, such works to be approved by the Secretary of War to the United States and to riparian commissioners in New Jersey.

Mr. Leavitt. To authorize the payment of $83.35, hospital expenses of William B. Turner, deputy keeper of the State prison, who was stabbed by a convict, said amount to be paid from the appropriation of 1910 for the maintenance of convicts.

RAILWAY CHIEF BOOMS GOV. WILSON.

"Woodrow Wilson, Governor of New Jersey, looks like the logical man for the Democrats to nominate in 1912," said John Skelton Williams, president of the Georgia and Florida Railway, and former president of the Seaboard Air Line, Tuesday.

"The only weak point the practical man can find against him today is that he has not had long political experience of a practical character. I am not prepared to say this is a weakness, but when one considers the big odds, the unscrupulousness of certain interests, it becomes a serious matter.

"Marching Through Georgia," is the new spectacle at the New York Hippodrome. It has been called a panoramic play of the South. The opening scene shows a cotton plantation at mid-day, oxen and mule teams, cotton bales and long rows of the growing cotton; singing, whistling and dancing darkies make up a realistic picture. 200 extra jubilee singers and dancers have been engaged for this feature. Mr. Voegtlin has produced several new and excellent scenic effects, notably a perspective in the cotton field scene. The conclusion is marked by the building of a Pontoon bridge which is actually constructed in full sight of the audience and so practically is the work done that a regiment of soldiers, a cavalry troupe, a band of negroes and soldeirs mounted on horseback cross the bridges at the finale. Besides the big new show has two other spectacles "The Ballet of Niagara" and "The International Cup" as well as the big circus comprises the program.

COMPROMISE AUTO BILL ABOUT TO MAKE ITS BOW.

The automobilists have given up hopes of passing either the Edge or Bracken automobile bills through the Senate and have decided to try to get some compromise measure through the upper branch of the Legislature.

The first step in the program will be to secure a report in the near future by the Senate Committee on Revision of the laws of a substitute bill for both the Bracken and Edge measures. This bill will eliminate every feature of the other measure with the exception of providing fifteen days' free touring privileges to residents of States giving New Jersey a similar privilege, and of modifying the power of attorney law.

It is this latter feature of the bill which presents a most interesting question. At first bulsh, those who have examined the bill say it seems to be a very weak thing, which the automobilists are offering as a substitute for the rigid power of attorney bill now on our statute books. The substitute wipes out the necessity for filing a signed power of attorney upon entering the State and merely provides that all non-residents entering the State shall be considered automatically to have constituted the secretary of State their agent upon whom process may be served.

The substitute is now in the hands of Senator Edge. There are a few Senators who would like to get a reciprocity bill through the Legislature who are, however, strongly committed to the preservation of the power of attorney provisions. The new method of procedure will be carefully scrutinized before it is passed. If no method of insuring its enforcement is provided it is looked upon as a practical certainty that it will go the way of its predecessors.

Each Senator found on his desk Monday night an open letter on the stationery of the New Jersey Automobile and Motor Club.

This fixed event of this store, and the one always looked forward to with interest and expectancy by the women of Plainfield, is of more than usual importance this season, mainly because it is our formal opening of the season and because of the extensive preparations which have been made to make it a noteworthy occasion in every sense of the word.

Here you will find a vivid portrayal of the styles which have been decreed as absolutely correct for spring wearing. In the Millinery Department our broad, satisfying assemblage of models embraces the small turban trimmed with but a single rose to the large picture hat gracefully draped with flowers and ribbons.

And in the ready to wear department the gathering of models is so very extensive, in every way, you will be bound to become impressed with the beauty of our stocks and the splendid values we offer.

We cordially invite you to visit this important display and assure you you will find much of interest, and that the display will help you wonderfully in making a satisfying selection.

BASEBALL.

Ty Cobb and Syd Smith were old rivals in the South Atlantic League, but Ty beat the bulky catcher into the American League by a couple of years and was already famous when Smith joined the Athletics. The first time that Smith caught for Connie Mack against Detroit, Cobb swaggered up to bat and said:

"Hello, Syd. If I get on, I am going to steal on the first ball. Just thought I would tell you in advance, so you would be prepared."

Inasmuch as Bender was pitching and the chief watches the bases like a hawk, Syd made up his mind that Ty was going to have his trouble in getting a lead that would land him on second.

Smith said nothing. Cobb got on. He tried to sneak over to Davis and Cobb was out. The next time up he got on again, and this time Smith nailed him easily, as he did the third time also. Then Cobb was peeved way through.

"Trying to show me up, are you?" he snarled.

"Not on your life," replied Syd. But you were making your brags and trying to show me up, so I crossed you a little."

Outfielder John Covelski, of the St. Louis Americans, has been purchased by Manager Eddie McCafferty for his Montreal club.

The Pittsburg Regulars and Yannigans both hit the ball hard in a practise game at Hot Springs, Ark., Tuesday, the Regulars winning out 12 runs to 8.

The Boston Nationals defeated the Tourists of the South Atlantic League in Augusta, Ga., Tuesday by the score of 19 to 0.

Bradley Kocher, of White Haven, Pa., has signed to play with Joe Kelley's Maple Leafs. He has joined the Toronto squad at Macon, Ga.

Pitcher Walter Johnson fanned eleven men at Atlanta, Ga., Tuesday in a game between two teams of the Washington Americans. The game was called after the ninth inning with the score a tie, each nine having collected six tallies.

Otto Deininger, centre fielder of the Jersey City Skeeters, is at Harvard, where he will remain for two weeks. Deininger will assist Coach Sexton in selecting the varsity baseball nine.

The Chicago Cubs took the measure of the Mobile Southern League Club Tuesday, in a one-sided contest, by a score of 12 to 4.

Raymond shows whole lots of stuff down in Marlin, and if he keeps straight he should win many games for McGraw.

A Pennsylvania boy will land the job of third catcher of the Yankees. The candidates are Joe Walsh, the big Villanova football player, and Bob Williams, who was with Scranton last year. Sweeney and Blair will do most of the catching.

It looks like Elliott has won the third-base berth on the infield of the New York Americans, with Hartzell booked for utility roles.

Brooklyn may put Bill Bergen, its erring maskman, on the market. Bergen is still a wonderful thrower and a crack all-around catcher, but as a batsman he's about the poorest in the league.

Sunday Baseball Hearing.

The Revision of Laws Committee of the House gave a public hearing Tuesday afternoon to Mr. Egan's bill legalizing the playing of Sunday baseball. A large number of clergymen from different parts of the State were on hand, and spoke in opposition to the measure, claiming that such a law would result in the desecration of the Sabbath. Frank T. Greaves, of Paterson, and Assemblyman McLaughlin, of Union, were strong advocates of Sunday ball, claiming it to be a clean and harmless recreation.

A Mrs. S—— after selecting her outfit and learning the total cost from our plainly marked price tags, said she preferred to make comparisons elsewhere before ordering, to which we readily agreed, for it's a thing we always URGE!

On getting another store's prices (where they were marked in private signs) she found ours were far less, and SAID so. The salesman promptly dropped to our figures—AND GOT THE ORDER.

Here, where there's but ONE PLAINLY MARKED PRICE ON EVERY ITEM, such an "accommodating" and sudden price drop would be impossible—here, when you read the price tag, you KNOW it's already at lowest point, for ALL prices are made and REMAIN on the SAME UNIFORMLY SMALL PROFIT BASIS. The demonstration of regular class work in physical education under the direction of Miss Addie Parker Jackson, supervisor of physical education in the Plainfield public schools, attracted a capacity audience to the high school, yesterday afternoon. The exercises in which the children took part covered an extensive field, from hygenic exercises, giving correct position and exercise of muscles of respiration, causing deep breathing, to rhythmical exercises, including deep breathing, by the harmonizing of which the nervous system is refreshed and invigorated and the muscles trained in harmonious relationship.

Miss Jackson in the beginning gave a brief explanation of the program and work covered and the large audience showed deep interest in the various exercises, generally applauding the participants. The children gave marked evidence of careful training, going through the different movements with precision and grace. The program itself was self-explanatory, giving the exercise and also telling of its particular value as follows:

Number 3
THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

Dobbins a year ago last October, and it was decided to fill that vacancy and increase the number by one.

Oliver B. Leonard, church clerk, read the report of the benevolence committee, showing total receipts for the year to be $3,123.05, with a balance on hand of $27.53. Deacon F. W. Jones reported for the deacons' fund, showing that the receipts for the year were $1,033.89, expenditures $996.40, leaving a balance of $37.49. He also reported $2,100 in a trust fund on deposit in The Plainfield Trust Company; also $500 in an emergency fund. These reports do not include those of the various church societies which are submitted at another time.

It was decided that the pastor, Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, Deacon George H. Batchelor and Clerk O. B. Leonard should have supervision of the bed at the hospital supported by the church.

Prior to the business meeting, a prayer service was held, the leader of which was J. Henry Crane, of the Men's Bible Conference class. This lasted about a half hour, when the business was taken up. Thirteen young people, two young men and eleven young women, a majority of which are members of Mrs. Louis Matlack's Sunday-school class, were received into membership on confession of faith. They will be baptised so that they may take their first communion on Easter Sunday, it being decided to postpone the event from the first Sunday in April to that time, when special services will be held appropriate to Easter. Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss presided at the annual meeting.

CLEVELAND MEMORIAL FUND OVER-SUBSCRIBED.

Contributions to the Cleveland monument fund continue to come into the office of former United States Senator John F. Dryden, in the Prudential building. Yesterday's receipts amounted to over $250, and it is expected that more will be coming in a few days from Louisville, Ky., where Harry J. Powell, president of the National Association of Fire Underwriters, has started a movement to raise money through various branches of the association.

The fund of $100,000 is now oversubscribed more than $5,000, and it is thought that before the completed lists are sent out this will be materially increased.

SEWAGE DISPOSAL

Text of Committee's Report on Bill, No. 41, Made to State Senate.

ADVERSE TO BOUND BROOK.

Its Passage Would Undo All North Plainfield's Work for Sanitary Disposal Plant Committee Finds.

Following is the complete text of the findings of the Senate committee, consisting of Senators Frelinghuysen, Prince and Johnson, in reporting to the State Senate Bill No. 41, which would prevent North Plainfield from consummating its plans for a sewage disposal plant at Greenbrook without the consent of the State Board of Health, the bill being urged by Bound Brook. Senator Frelinghuysen in explaining the committee's action advised his collegues against the passage of the measure:

"This bill contemplates adding to the powers of the State Board of Health by giving them authority to locate sewerage disposal plants, in addition to the present authority which they now have over the passing on the plans and systems of sewerage disposal plants.

"The effects of this bill is general in character, and possibly it might be a good plan to vest the State Board of Health with authority to locate these plants where sewerage disposal is contemplated, but there appears to be other reasons for its introduction at this time, of which the Senate should be informed. This bill was introduced by the chairman of the committee at the request of certain property owners in Bound Brook, who object to the location of a sewerage system some distance from the borough line of Bound Brook borough, other property owners nearer and outside the limits of Bound Brook joining in the request that the bill be introduced.

"To show the effect of the bill the committee believe that it is only proper that the Senate should be informed of the situation in regard to a disposal plant contemplated by North Plainfield. The chairman of this committee has for the past four years been introducing bills to enable North Plainfield to dispose of its sewerage.

"Tracing the steps in North Plainfield's efforts to procure this system, we find that on January 13, 1910, consent was obtained from the township of North Plainfield to locate disposal works on the Zvolanck farm. On January 14, 1910, copy of this consent was filed with the State Board of Health. Then until July, 1910, the necessary consents, ordinances, and special elections were duly advertised, designating the Zvolanck site, all of which information was sent to the State Board of Health.

"In December, when this question was to be heard by the State Board of Health, one of the protestants came and requested a postponement in order that they might examine the plans of the sewerage system contemplated. The secretary of the State Board of Health granted a postponement for thirty days. Much to my surprise a bill was presented to me at the opening of the legislature which I introduced by request, and which is Senate Bill 41, which in effect will undo all of the work that North Plainfield has undertaken in their efforts to settle the sewerage question and will delay the matter for sometime to come.

"Therefore, the object of this bill must be considered, not the enactment of a general law for the benefit of the State but in order to prevent North Plainfield from carrying out their plans. As to whether the system to be employed and the plans are satisfactory under the present law is for the State Board of Health to decide. The question as to the location is already fixed by reason of the fact that it requires the consent of the governing body of the municipality for the location, and this has been obtained from North Plainfield township.

"The location is a mile and a quarter from the borough line of Bound Brook, almost at the extreme end of the township, 1,300 feet from the township line, and about five miles from the borough of North Plainfield. There are several residences within 500 to 1,000 feet of the locality decided upon. The conditions of the protestants is that the carrying of this sewerage from North Plainfield to within a mile and a quarter of the Bound Brook line is a menace to that municipality, and there is no protection under the law to protect them. Whether it is a menace or not is a moot question. Although this matter has been before the State Board of Health since December they have taken the position that they must await the final action of this senate committee in the Legislature upon this measure before going on with these plans.

"For over a year Bound Brook has been cognizant of this situation, and now comes before this legislature asking us to take action notwithstanding that fact that North Plainfield has proceeded according to law in the matter.

There is no municipality in the State which so sorely needs sewerage as North Plainfield, and inasmuch as this controversy has arisen, the question is whether the location of this sewerage plant a mile and a quarter from Bound Brook, and the protests of its citizens, warrants the over turning of the plans of North Plainfield, and the delay in giving to North Plainfield the relief that they need.

"This Committee cannot assume the capacity of judges, neither do we feel that we should be the agency by a law to prevent North Plainfield from proceeding. It is not a question of the greatest good to the greatest number, and is it not necessary that we should allow this municipality of the State to proceed. We feel that while this law is a good general law, maybe a righteous one, that the matter should proceed, and the State Board of Health should either approve or disapprove this system and permit North Plainfield to complete her plans."

SAYS P.S.C. CAUSED REMOVAL OF CASEY

Lawyer Harry Meliker, of Jersey City, made a startling statement on behalf of his client, Councilman James G. Casey, to the Westfield Council investigating committee last night when he said that it was his belief that the investigation was instituted by former Mayor A. L. Alpers to have Councilman Casey removed because of his, Casey's, opposition to making a contract for street lighting with the Public Service Corporation, and for this reason Mr. Alpers removed Casey from the chairmanship of the street lighting and town property committee of the Council.

Lawyer Meliker said that the Public Service Corporation knew Casey was going to be removed from the chairmanship of the committee several days before Casey knew of it. Mayor Alpers took the stand and said that he had nothing to do with the investigation, that he had no talks with the Public Service, nor did he suggest to anyone that Casey was going to be removed from the chairmanship.

The meeting was the final session of the committee. Other witnesses were the assessors, who testified that gross negligence was the cause for nearly $200,000 worth of assessments being left off the books, but which had later been added and the taxes, amounting to about $4,000, collected.

The topics for Sunday's sermons at the Park avenue church are: Morning, "The Mind of the Master;" evening, "A Father and His Offering." Both sermons will be preached by the pastor, Rev. Gabriel Reid Maguire.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning March 26, 1911.

Topic.—A missionary journey round the world.—III. Missions in the United States (west).—Isa. lxii, 1-12. Edited by Rev. Sherman H. Doyle, D. D.

No adjective better describes the western part of our country than the word "great." It is great in area, great in spiritual needs, great in possibilities for Christ. Pre-eminently is it the great home mission field of the present day, for if you think that missionary work in the west is well nigh done you simply do not know the facts. The west is more and more becoming the homeof the foreigner who comes to our land with his un-American and, so often, with his un-Christian ideas and practices. The readiness with which people leaving Christian homes and Christian communities become indifferent to all religious work and worship under the changed conditions in the west but magnifies the need. Many of our western fields today are as needy of the church and the gospel as can be found. There are districts in the west occupied by many people where there is not a church of any denomination. Here the real battle in the Christianization of our land must be fought, and there is no more important work in the church today than that of holding the west for Christ. It won and America is won; America won and the world is won.

How deeply should we rejoice that with the westward march of our civilization the church sought to keep pace. What a tremendous debt do we owe to those pioneers who led—the van, bearing aloft the banner of the cross. The only way in which we can honor those heroic souls is by continuing the work they so nobly begun. The work of evangelization must go on. We are called to it by every consideration of patriotism and religion. It is the cause of country, the cause of humanity, the cause of God. We must evangelize the west for the sake of the people who are already there and who are going there. They are souls for whom Christ died, as well as the hordes of Africa. We must evangelize it for the sake of our country, of which it is an integral and important part. The coming millions of the west must be pervaded by the gospel of Christ. We cannot afford to leave so influential a part of our country to godlessness and its attendant perils. We must go up and possess this land for Christ, for it is our land. The people of the west are doing all they can for themselves, laboring with splendid intelligence and devotion and giving generously. But their numbers in many sections are comparatively few, the regions to be supplied are vast, and the need is great. We should give all the help that we can, and give it now, before the formation period is passed. Today calls the opportunity whose knell tomorrow may sound. Grasping this grand opportunity, sending forth our missionaries, the gospel's sound will be heard in every hamlet, village, town and city, and the songs of the redeemed will be sung by the vast and sturdy population which is to determine so largely the future character and destiny of our nation.

BIBLE READINGS.

"Coaching" In Churches.

The public school until recently has been a mill that ground alike whatever came into its hopper—coal or marble, wheat or pebbles. The bright scholar had too little to do, the average scholar got along fairly well, and the poor scholar, after perhaps years of heartache and desperate plodding, finally was tossed out upon the rubbish heap.

In these wiser days the schools are installing "coaching teachers," whose duty it is to give special attention to the poorest scholars in the various classes and try by earnest personal work to place them at least in the position of the average pupils.

Under this system, in one school near Boston where six nationalities meet, only 14 per cent. fail to go on with their classes. Three years ago, unde the old system, 50 per cent of the pupils fell by the wayside.

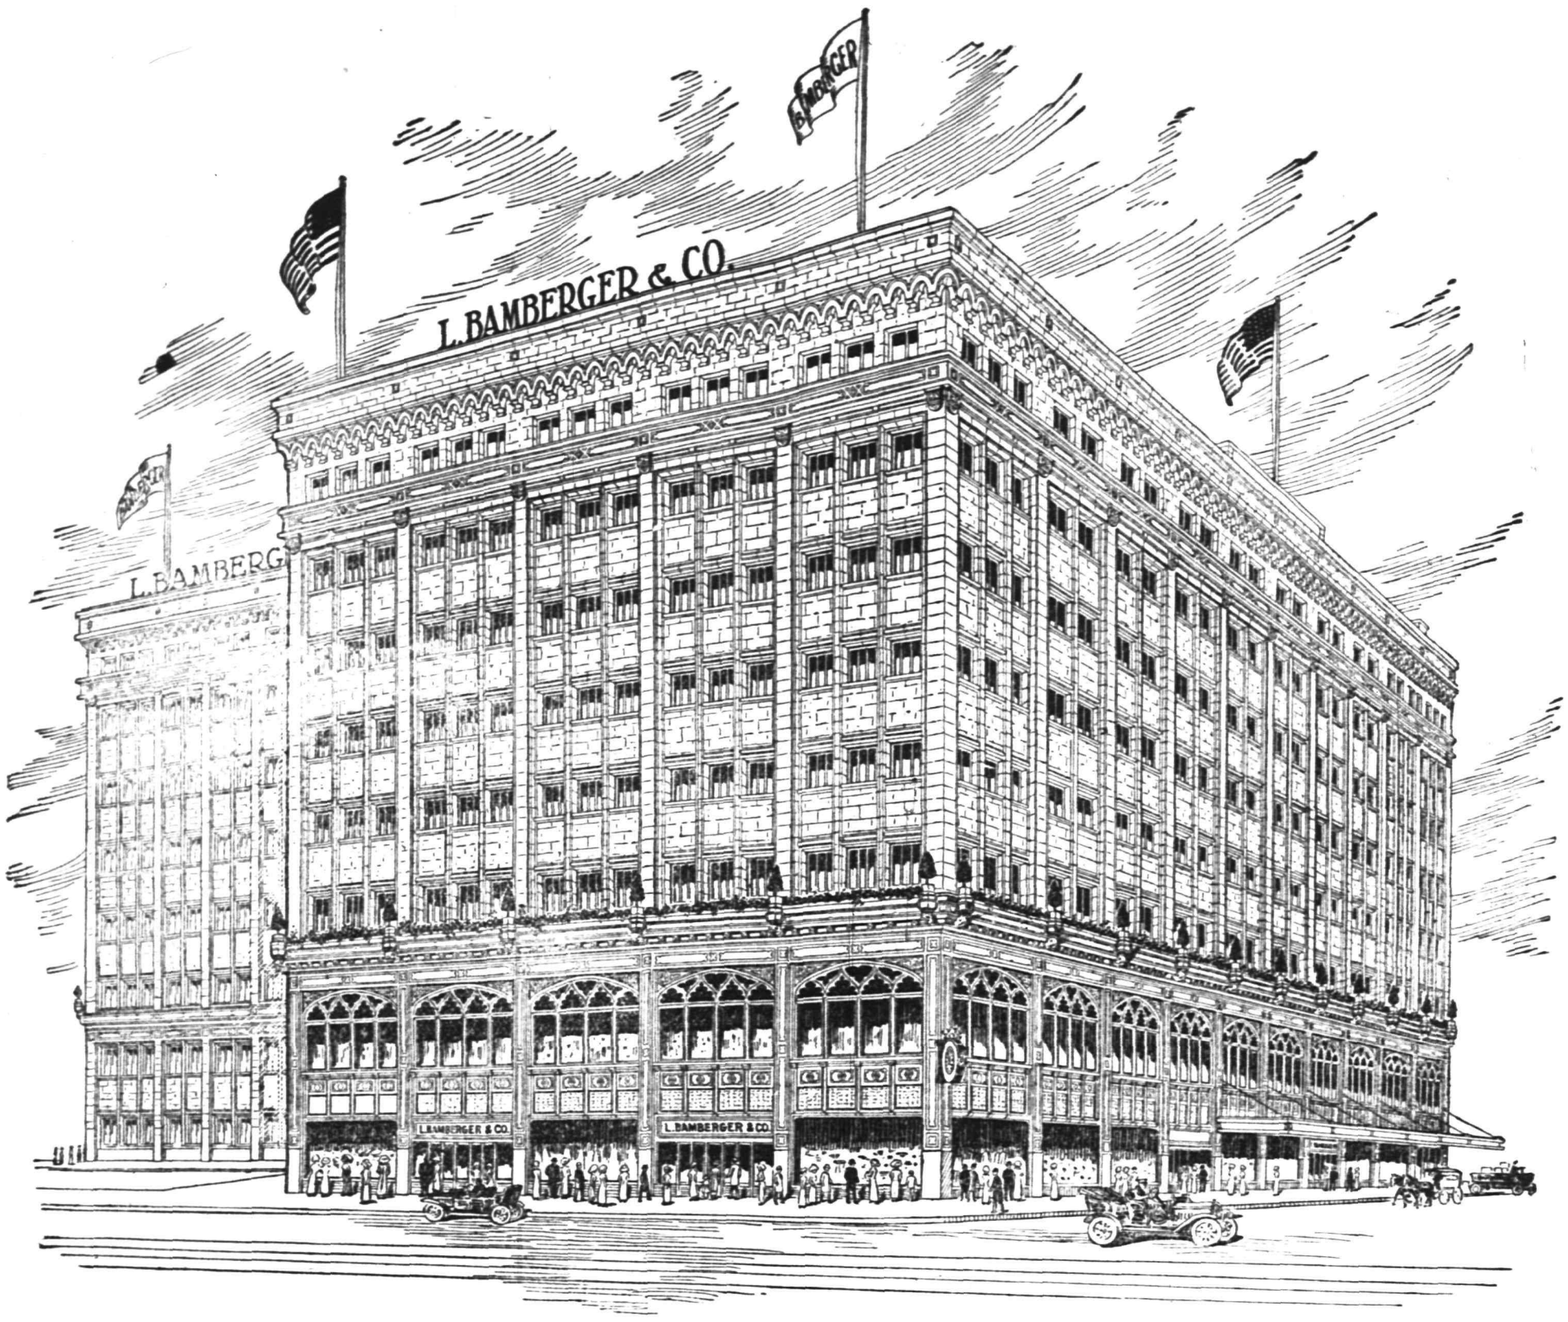
Now, just this work of coaching is done in our churches by the Christian Endeavor societies, Junior, Young People's and Senior. With a beautiful brotherly spirit the workers that advance more rapidly help on those that move slowly. That is what our lookout committees do, and our prayer meeting committees, and, indeed, all our other committees. Christian Endeavor means that the Christians, young and old, are first helping themselves to the strength that Christ bestows and then helping others to it.

No one left behind, no one falling by the way—that is the spirit of the best modern education, and it is the spirit of Christian Endeavor.—Arrow in Christian Endeavor World.

Christian Endeavor's Influence.

I believe in Christian Endeavor because I have seen it train children into Christian life in a sawmill village that was without any other services until, when a pastor came, eleven were ready for church membership and five took their parents also to the altar. It changed the lifeless prayer meeting in a prison into a lively band of Christian workers. It brought to those men comfort and strength to bear their condition. I have seen it sustain for years regular services in a rough community without a pastor.—S. M. Sloan.

BAMBERGER'S NEW $2,000,000 NEWARK STORE



WORK IS BEGUN ON BAMBERGER $2,000,000 STORE

Immense Nine-Story White Structure Will Be Completed Within a Year.

NOTHING CONDUCIVE TO COMFORT TO BE OMITTED.

Fronts 144 Feet on Market St., 235 on Halsey and 116 on Washington, Newark.

The firm of L. Bamberger & Co. is preparing to beautify Newark and to keep pace with its own expanding requirements.

The spirit of enterprise and progress which has directed the destinies of this firm during the past eighteen years to its present successful position in the commercial world is manifest in the provisions which it is making for future necessities.

The firm's new building, to be known as "The Big White Store," is under way. The work of demolishing the old structures is now in progress.

The new building is to cost approximately $2,000,000, and will be completed within a year.

The site of the new structure will cover the block on Market street from Halsey to Washington street. On Market street there will be a frontage of 144 feet. The structure will be L-shaped in formation. It will have a depth of 116 feet on Washington street and 235 feet on Halsey street.

Imposing and commodious entrances on the three thoroughfares will be provided.

Nine-story Gothic Pile.

In architectural design the general treatment of the building will be Gothic. Including the basement, there are to be nine stories. The specifications call for an exterior that will be imposingly beautiful. Polished granite up to the second floor will serve as a massive base upon which is to rest a superstructure of pure white terra cotta.

The interior will be of design and workmanship in keeping with the simple beauty of the exterior. Solid mahogany and rosewood bases will prevail throughout. The building will be essentially a daylight store. The window arrangement is such as to provide for the greatest possible admission of natural light.

A complete enumeration of its many provisions is not now possible. It is obvious, however, that the comfort and welfare of the public has been largely considered. For instance, within the building there will be provided one of the largest rest rooms in the city.

In addition, there will be a complete auditorium, with a seating capacity of over 1,000, wherein it is contemplated to entertain the public by providing suitable entertainments from time to time.

The children are also remembered. The little ones who must accompany their mothers may find comfort and amusement in a completely-appointed playroom which is to be provided.

It is possible, also, that the building may provide a cooled breathing spot in the hot summer months. The construction of a roof garden is contemplated, and it is not improbable that it may form part of this modern structure when completed.

The firm has evidently given much consideration to the safety and comfort of the public. In addition to the amusements which are to be provided, the building is to be supplied throughout with a system of moving stairways.

Safeguards Against Fire Peril.

What is deemed to be an essential precaution against the danger from fire is the provision for the construction of numerous fire-proof stairways throughout the building, but separate and distinct from the building proper. To aid in this regard, there will be a complete sprinkler and stand-pipe system with over eight thousand sprinkler heads.

For the accommodation of the public there will be eight express elevators of the most modern type distributed in convenient batteries throughout the store.

To provide for freight necessities there will be constructed on the Halsey street side elevator facilities sufficiently ample to admit the largest furniture van, including the horses.

In providing for the comfort and safety of the public the firm of L. Bamberger & Co. has not overlooked the necessities of its employees.

Kitchen and restaurant facilities for employees, wherein meals may be obtained at a nominal cost, are to be provided. A striking instance of the modern view of the employees' comfort is given by the "rest and recreation rooms" which it is to provide for the employees.

The comfort of the employees is further provided for in the ample locker facilities which will be furnished on each floor. By this means congestion among employees at opening and closing time will be avoided.

500,000 Square Feet of Floor.

Some idea of the magnitude of the building may be gathered from the following facts:

The floor space of the new structure will be approximately 500,000 square feet.

There will be installed the most complete electric and power plant in the city.

A complete ice plant for the manufacture of ice.

A bakery large enough to furnish a small city.

A candy factory of huge dimensions.

An incinerating plant for the destruction of waste paper and refuse generally.

The largest fur-storage plant in the city, with complete vacuum process for the proper cleansing of furs.

Around the third floor will be a balcony with a row of vari-colored flowers and trimmed boxwood trees. This is said to be something unique in the way of department store exterior display. The green foliage contrasting with the pure white stone-work will produce a beautiful effect.

Setting a Watch.

"The jeweler set my watch within a thousandth of a second when he gave it to me today," said the man with a new timepiece, "and this is how he did it:

"He has a clock wired up with the big chronometer at Washington. At 4 p. m. this clock was corrected to the thousandth of a second. At 4:05 he was ready to deliver my watch. His master clock has a 39.1 inch pendulum, so it ticks seconds. Each of the first fifty-five ticks in each minute is announced by a telegraph sounder in the clock, then the last five seconds are silent. The watchmaker rested a camel's hair brush on the balance wheel of the watch to stop it, then set all the hands, hour, minute and second at 4:06:00 and waited. When the silence of the sounder indicated 4:05:55 he got ready, and five seconds later, on the first tick of 4:06, he lifted the brush and the watch started. By looking at the second hand with a glass and listening to the clock announcer I proved their identicalness except for the time it took the sound to travel from the clock to my ear."—New York Sun.

Daniel Wilson, His House.

Dr. Daniel Wilson, afterward principal of the University of Toronto, used in earlier days to live near Lauriston, in Scotland. One day Dr. John Beddoe (who has written an autobiography) set out to find him. "Having," he says, "no clear idea of the situation of the house, I entered St. Margaret's lane, which I conceived must lead in the right direction, and, meeting a gentleman just about to issue therefrom, asked whether he could direct me to Dr. Wilson's new house. He looked hard at me and inquired:

"'Do you know Daniel Wilson?' 'I do.' 'Intimately?' 'Yes, intimately.' 'Then follow this road till you see a house that looks as if it belongs to Daniel Wilson, and that will be it.' I thanked him and, following his advice, had no difficulty in identifying the house. It had a window which contained some tracery of a pattern which I knew Wilson considered peculiarly Scottish."

Forbidden Ground.

A visit of Gladstone to the Isle of Man is recalled by Agnes Herbert and described in her book about that interesting little speck in the midst of the Irish sea.

Mr. Gladstone had made a detour across a small holding in Rushen, and his way lay through the "haggart" where the stacks are harvested. A strong, powerfully built Manxwoman stood throwing up the straw to the stack, using her fork as deftly and quickly as a farm laborer.

"That is very hard work, my good woman," the Grand Old Man is reported to have said graciously, "but you look well and strong. May I ask how old you are?"

The toiler hardly turned as she answered sharply:

"How oul' art thou thyself, thou impert'nent oul' man?"

The Arts of Asia.

It was Asia, through Arabia, which gave Europe the literature, the arts and the sciences which we have developed and of which we now boast. Gunpowder was probably invented in China. It was certainly introduced into Europe from Arabia. The finely tempered steel of Damascus went over from Arabia at the time of the Moorish invasion of Spain, and its manufacture was continued at Toledo. The coppersmiths of Bagdad supplied the world's market with their wonderful productions centuries before there were any industries in Europe. Weaving of silk and cotton had its birth as an industry in Arabia, and the weaving of wool was learned by the crusaders in the same wonderful country. Astronomy, mathematics, the mariner's compass—all came to us from the Arabs.—Argonaut.

The Tramp and the Dog.

Mrs. Suburb—Oh, my dear, that magnificent watchdog you brought home yesterday is gone?

Mr. Suburb—Eh? Did he break the chain?

"No, but an ugly looking tramp came around and acted so terribly that I let the dog loose, but instead of tearing the tramp to pieces he went off with him."

"Great snakes! It must have been the same tramp I bought him of!"—New York Weekly.

The Particulars.

"Yes," said the clerk as he dipped his pen in the ink and prepared to fill out the blank. "Your name, please?"

"Amelia Whippleton."

"Nationality?"

"American."

"Married or unmarried?"

"Both—twice."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Doubter.

"The world is getting so good you may soon see the lion lie down with the lamb."

"Yes, but when the lion rises, where will the lamb be?"

"I dunno. You'll have to ask somebody in Wall street!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Cynical.

"People who lose their money are always complaining to their friends about it."

Still She Liked Him.

She—Yes, I like Ted. He is such a extravagant. He—That is hardly the best quality for a husband, is it? She—Of course not; I am not going to marry him.—Boston Herald.

"This is an idle tale," said the traveler. "Go into the pool before me and I will believe and follow you under the rock. I will not go and leave you here."

"You are not very brave, though you are so handsome! If they come and find me here, they will kill me first."

"You say it, but I do not believe it. I think there is a deep hole in the passage and that I shall slip into it and be drowned, for no man could swim in such a place. I have but one life, and I do not care to lose it in a water-rat's trap. You must go in and lead the way if you wish me to trust you."

Baraka hesitated and looked at him.

"How can I do this before you?" she asked.

"I will not go alone," the man answered, for he suspected foul play. "Do as you will."

The girl took from her head the large cotton cloth with which she veiled herself, and folded it and laid it down on the rock by the pool; then she let her outer tunic of thin white woolen fall to the ground round her feet and stepped out of it, and folded it also, and laid it beside her veil, and she stood up tall and straight as a young Egyptian goddess in the starlight, clothed only in the plain shirt without sleeves which the women of her country wear night and day; and the traveler saw her cream-white arms near him in the soft gloom, and heard her slip off her light shoes.

"I will go before you," she said; and she stepped into the pool and walked slowly through the water.

The traveler followed her as he was, for he was unwilling to leave behind him anything he valued, and what he had was mostly in the pockets of his coat, and could not be much hurt by water. Even his pressed herbs and flowers would dry again, his cartridges were quite waterproof, his letters were in an impervious case, and his money was in coin. When he entered the pool he took his revolver from its place and he held it above the water in front of him as he went on. With his other hand he carried the sack he had brought, which was one of those that are made of Bokhara carpet and are meant to sling on a camel.

Baraka was almost up to her neck in the water when she reached the other side of the pool; a moment later she disappeared under the rock, and the traveler bent his knees to shorten himself, for there was only room for his head above the surface, and he held up his revolver before his face to keep the weapon dry, and also to feel his way, lest he should strike against any jutting projection of the stone and hurt himself. He counted the steps he took, and made them as nearly as possible of equal length. He felt that he was walking on perfectly smooth sand, into which his heavily shod feet sank a very little. There was plenty of air, for the gentle draught followed him from the entrance and chilled the back of his neck, which had got wet; yet it seemed hard to breathe, and as he made his way forward his imagination pictured the death he must die if the rock should fall in behind him. He was glad that the faint odor of Baraka's wet hair came to his nostrils in the thick darkness, and it was very pleasant to hear her voice when she spoke at last.

"It is not far," she said quietly. "I begin to see the starlight on the water."

The passage did not widen or grow higher as it went on. If it had been dry, it would have been a commodious cave, open at each end, wide at the bottom and narrowing to a sharp angle above. But the pool was fed by a spring that never failed nor even ebbed, though it must sometimes have overflowed down the ravine through which the two had reached the pool.

They came out from under the rock at last, and were in the refreshing outer air. The still water widened almost to a circle, a tiny lake at the bottom of a sort of crater of white stone that collected and concentrated the dim light. On two sides there were little crescent beaches of snow-white sand, that gleamed like silver. The traveler looked about him and upward to see if there was any way of climbing up; but as far as he could make out in the half darkness the steep rock was as smooth as if it had been cut with tools, and it sloped away at a sharp angle like the sides of a funnel.

Baraka went up towards the right, and the bottom shelved, so that presently the water was down to her waist, and then she stood still and pointed to a dark hollow just above the little beach. Her wet garment clung to her, and with her left hand she began to wring the water from her hair behind her head.

"The rubies are there," she said, "thousands upon thousands of them. Fill the sack quickly, but do not take more than you can carry, for they are very heavy."

The traveler waded out upon the beach, and the water from his clothes ran down in small rivulets and made little round holes in the white sand. He put down his revolver in a dry place, and both his hands felt for the precious stones in the shadowy hollow, loosening small fragments of a sort of brittle crust in which they seemed to be clustered.

"You cannot choose," Baraka said, "for you cannot see, but I have been here by daylight and have seen. The largest are on the left side of the hollow, near the top."

By the stars the traveler could see the pieces a little, as he broke them out, for the white rocks collected the light; he could see many dark crystals, but as to what they were he had to trust the girl.

"Do not take more than you can carry," she repeated, "for you must not throw them away to lighten the burden."

"You can carry some of them," answered the traveler.

He broke up the crust of crystals with a small geologist's hammer and tore them out like a madman, and his hands were bleeding, for though he was a philosopher the thirst for wealth had come upon him when he felt the riches of empires in his grasp, and the time was short; and although he knew that he might some day come back with armed men to protect him, and workmen to help him, he know also that to do this he must share the secret with the over-lord of that wild country, and that his portion might be the loss of his head. So he tore at the ruby crust with all his might, and as he was very strong, he broke out great pieces at once.

"We cannot carry more than that, both of us together," said Baraka, though she judged more by the sound of his work than by what she could see.

He lifted the sack with both his hands, and he knew by its weight that she was right. Under the water it would be easy enough to carry, but it would be a heavy load for a man to shoulder.

"Come," Baraka said, "I will go back first."

She moved down into the deeper water again, till it was up to her neck; and feeling the way with her hands she went in once more under the rock. The traveler followed her cautiously, carrying the heavy sack under water with one hand and holding up his revolver with the other to keep it dry.

"I begin to see the starlight on the water," Baraka said, just as before, when they had been going in.

When she had spoken, she heard a heavy splash not far off, and the water in the subterranean channel rose suddenly and ran past her in short waves, three of which covered her mouth in quick succession and reached to her eyes, and almost to the top of her head, but sank again instantly; and they passed her companion in the same way, wetting his weapon.

"Go back," Baraka said, when she could speak; "the rock is falling."

The traveler turned as quickly as he could, and she came after him, gaining on him because he carried the heavy sack and could not move as fast as she. He felt his damp hair rising with fear, for he believed that, after all, she had brought him into a trap. They reached the opening and came out into the pool again.

"You have brought me here to die," he said. "Your father and your brothers have shut up the entrance with great stones, and they will go up the mountain and let themselves down from above with ropes and shoot me like a wolf in a pit-fall. But you shall die first, because you have betrayed me."

So he cocked his revolver and set the muzzle against her head, to kill her, holding her by her slender throat with his other hand; for they were in shallow water and he had dropped the sack in the pool.

Baraka did not struggle or cry out.

"I would rather die by your hand than be alive in another man's arms," she said quite quietly.

He let her go, merely because she was so very brave, for he did not love her at all. She knew it, but that made no difference to her, since no other woman was near; if they could get out alive with the rubies she was sure that he would love her for the sake of the great wealth she had brought him. If they were to starve to death at the bottom of the great rock wall in the mountains, she would probably die first, because he was so strong; and then nothing would matter. It was all very simple.

The traveler fished up the sack and waded out upon the tiny beach. He looked up rather anxiously thereon as he could not have seen a head looking down from above if there had been any one there. There was not light enough. He understood also that if the men were going to shoot at him from the height they would wait till it was daylight. Baraka stood still in the water, which was up to her waist, and he paid no attention to her, but sat down to think what he should do. The night was warm, and his clothes would dry on him by degrees. He would have taken them off and spread them out, for he thought no more of Baraka's presence than if she had been a harmless young animal standing there in the pool, but he could not tell what might happen at any moment, and so long as he was dressed and had all his few belongings about him, he felt ready to meet fate.

Baraka saw that he did not heed her, and was thinking. She came up out of the water very slowly, and she modestly loosened her wet garment from her, so that it hung straight when she stood at the end of the beach, as far from the traveler as possible. She, also, sat down to dry herself; and there was silence for a long time.

After half an hour the traveler rose and began to examine the rock, feeling it with his hands wherever there was the least shadow, as high as he could reach, to find if there was any foothold, though he was already sure that there was not.

"There is no way out," Baraka said at last. "I have been here by day. I have seen."

"They will let themselves down from above with ropes, till they are near enough to shoot," the traveler answered.

"No," replied Baraka. "They know that you have a good weapon, and they will not risk their lives. They will leave us here to starve. That is what they will do. It is our portion, and we shall die. It will be easy, for there is water, and when we are hungry we can drink our fill. You will die first. You are not as we are, you cannot live so long without food."

The traveler wondered if she was right, but he said nothing.

"If we had got out with the treasure," continued Baraka, "you would have loved me for it, because you would have been the greatest man in the world through me. But now, because we must die, you hate me. I understand. If you do not kill me you will die first; and when you are dead I shall kiss you many times, till I die also. It will be very easy. I am not afraid."

The man sat quite still and looked at the dark streak by the edge of the pool where the water had wet it when the falling boulder outside had sent in little waves. He could see it distinctly. Again there was silence for a long time. Now and then Baraka loosened her only garment about her as she sat, so that it might dry more quickly; and she quietly wrung out her thick black hair and shook it over her shoulders to dry it, too, and stuck her two silver pins into the sand beside her.

Still the traveler sat with bent head, gazing at the edge of the pool. His hands were quite dry now, and he slowly rubbed the clinging moisture from his revolver. Some men would have been thinking, in such a plight, that if starving were too hard to bear, a bullet would shorten their sufferings in the end; but this man was very full of life, and the love of life, and while he lived he would hope.

He still watched the same dark streak where the sand was wet; he had not realized that he had been so far from it till then, but by looking at it a long time in the starlight his sight had probably grown tired, so that he no longer saw it distinctly. He raised himself a little on his hands and pushed himself down till it was quite clearly visible again, and he looked at the rock opposite and up to the stars again, to rest his eyes. He was not more than a yard from the water now.

The place was very quiet. From far above a slight draught of air descended, warm from the rocks that had been heated all day in the sun. But there was no sound except when Baraka moved a little.

Presently she did not move any more, and when the traveler looked he saw that she was curled up on the sand, as eastern women lie when they sleep, and her head rested on her hand; for her garment was dry now, and she was drowsy after the walk and the effort she had made. Besides, since there was no escape from death, and as the man did not love her, she might as well sleep if she could.

He had been certain of the distance between his feet and the water's edge as he sat; it had been a yard at the most. But now it was more; he was sure that it was a yard and a half at the least. He rubbed his eyes and looked hard at the dark belt of wet sand, and it was twice as wide as it had been. The water was still running out somewhere, but it was no longer running in, and in an hour or two the pool would be dry. The traveler was something of an engineer, and understood sooner than an ordinary man could have done, that his enemies had intentionally stopped up the narrow entrance through which he had to come, both to make his escape impossible, and to hasten his end by depriving him of water. The fallen boulder alone could not have kept out the overflow of the spring effectually. They must have shoveled down masses of earth, with the plants that grew in it abundantly and filled it with twining threadlike roots, and they must have skillfully forced quantities of the stuff into the openings all round the big stone, making a regular dam against the spring, which would soon run down in the opposite direction. They knew, of course, that Baraka had led him to the place and had gone in with him, for she had left all her outer garments outside, and they meant that she should die also, with her secret. In a week, or a fortnight, or a month, they would come and dig away the dam and pry the boulder aside, and would get in and find the white bones of the two on the sand, after the vultures had picked them clean; and they would take the traveler's good revolver, and his money.

He thought of all these things as he sat there in the dim light, and watched the slow receding of the water-line, and listened to the girl's soft and regular breathing. There was no death in her dream, as she slept away the last hours of the night, though there might not be many more nights for her. He heard her breath, but he did not heed her, for the water was sinking before him, sinking away into the sand, now that it was no longer fed from the opening.

He sat motionless, and his thoughts ran madly from hope to despair and back again to hope. The water was going down, beyond question; if it was merely draining itself through the sand to some subterranean channel, he was lost, but if it was flowing away through any passage like the one by which he had entered, there was still a chance of escape—a very small chance. When death is at the gate the tiniest loophole looks wide enough to crawl through.

The surface of the pool subsided, but there was no loophole; and as the traveler watched, hope sank in his heart, like the water in the hollow of the sand; but Baraka slept on peacefully, curled up on her side like a little wild animal. When the pool was almost dry the traveler crept down to the edge and drank his fill, that he might not begin to thirst sooner than need be; and just then day dawned suddenly and the warm darkness gave way to a cool light in a few moments.

Immediately, because it was day, Baraka stretched herself on the sand and then sat up; and when she saw what the traveler was doing she also went and drank as much as she could swallow, for she had understood why he was drinking as soon as she saw that the pool was nearly dry. When she could drink no more she looked up at the rocks high overhead, and they were already white and red and yellow in the light of the risen sun; for in that country there is no very long time between dark night and broad day.

Baraka sat down again, on the spot where she had slept, but she said nothing. The man was trying to dig a little hole in the wet sand with his hands, beyond the water that was still left, for perhaps he thought that if he could make a pit on one side, some water would stay in it; but the sand ran together as soon as he moved it; and presently, as he bent over, he felt that he was sinking into it himself, and understood that it was a sort of quicksand that would suck him down. He therefore threw himself flat on his back, stretching out his arms and legs, and, making movements as if he were swimming, he worked his way from the dangerous place till he was safe on the firm white beach again. He sat up then, and bent his head till his forehead pressed on his hands, and he shut his eyes to keep out the light of day. He had not slept, as Baraka had, but he was not sleepy; perhaps he would not be able to sleep again before the end come. Baraka watched him quietly, for she understood that he despaired of life, and she wondered what he would do; and, besides, he seemed to her the most beautiful man in the world, and she loved him, and she was going to die with him.

It comforted her to think that no other woman could get him now. It was almost worth while to die for that alone; for she could not have borne that another woman should have him since he despised her, and if it had come to pass she would have tried to kill that other. But there was no danger of such a thing now; and he would die first, and she would kiss him many times when he was dead, and then she would die also.

The pool was all gone by this time, leaving a funnel-shapped hollow in the sand where it had been. If any water still leaked through from without it lost itself under the sand, and the man and the girl were at the bottom of a great natural well that was quite dry. Baraka looked up, and she saw a vulture sitting in the sun on a pinnacle, 300 feet above her head. He would sit there till she was dead, for he knew what was coming; then he would spread his wings a little and let himself down awkwardly, half-flying and half-scrambling. When he had finished, he would sit and look at her bones and doze, till he was able to fly away.

LIQUID CURES ECZEMA WHERE SALVES FAIL.

In regard to skin diseases, medical authorities are now agreed on this:

Don't imprison the disease germs in your skin by the use of greasy salves, and thus encourage them to multiply. A true cure of all eczematous diseases can be brought about only by using the healing agents in the form of a liquid.

WASH THE GERMS OUT.

A simple wash: A compound of Oil of Wintergreen, Thymol, and other ingredients as combined in the D. D. D. Prescription. This penetrates to the disease germs and destroys them, then soothes and heals the skin as nothing else has ever done.

TO TELL ALL ABOUT 'RIGHT KIND OF BOY'

Rev. F. K. Mathiews will deliver a lecture tomorrow afternoon in Y. M. C. A. Hall on "The Right Kind of a Boy or Teaching Obedience by Means of the Things That Boys Enjoy." The snyposis:

First. The right kind of a boy is fond of out doors, delights in making things, has a passion for play, and parents must learn to train in obedience by means of things that boys enjoy, for when interest is keenest the will is most easily fashioned; his love of nature—the out-of-doors life—provides material for moral and religious education.

Second. Training the boy to work; self-activity different from manual occupation; how to supply motive for industrial efforts; suggested material for home occupation.

Third. Why the boy without a playground is liable to become a father without a job; how play at its best becomes a school of ethics; play and piety—can we have a saved soul in a lost body? Correcting bad habits by means of play; training the motor minded boy through games and sports. The play instinct offer to parents the best opportunity of laying the foundation for confidence and companionship with their children.

The lecture will begin at 3:30 o'clock. All mothers of boys and teachers are invited.

RUSSELL D. MILLER QUITE AN ATHLETE

Russell D. Miller, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dudley S. Miller, of Union street, graduate of Plainfield High School, last year, and now a freshman at the Worcester Academy, Worcester, Mass., has been attracting attention in athletics, maintaining the reputation he made here in high school as well as at the Y. M. C. A. He is also a member of the academy glee club which is to sing at the annual banquet of the academy alumni association to be held Saturday night at the Hotel Belmont, New York city.

Miller took part in the annual athletic demonstration and prize drill for the possession of the MacMillan cup in the academy gymnasium, Saturday night, and the Worcester Telegram pays high tribute to his individual work. Among other things, it says:

"Captain Russell D. Miller did some feats of strength, and then of agility and nerve that gave him a round of applause over and again. He performed the difficult maltese cross on the flying rings that was a caution. He and Whitney were superb, Whitney hurling the 185 pounds through the air with perfect control and startling ease and grace, while the gatling gun Miller bounded around and about the mats like a rubber ball in the hands of an expert."

Another reference in the Worcester Telegram to Miller says: "If Lawrence Whitney keeps out of the all-round contest, it is a foregone conclusion that Russell D. Miller, captain of the gymnasium team, one of the best gymnasts the academy ever had, will be the man to fall into the title of champion all-round gymnasium man. In many of the exercises he has already attained a perfect mark. In the strength events, where the arms are concerned, he probably will break some of the school records. He has already shattered the rope climb record by half a second."

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

Realism in stage effects is the constant aim of theatrical producers, and the latest innovation is the use of the phonograph in securing realism in their productions. The aid of the phonograph was sought in the case of Eugene Walter's stirring and virile drama of the Canadian Hudson Bay country, "The Wolf," which comes to Plainfield Saturday next, matinee and night, it being used to reproduce the howling of a pack of wolves, thus carrying the effect called for in the last act of "The Wolf."

Lillian Russell will be the attraction at the Plainfield theatre next Tuesday night, March 28. The offering which Miss Russell brings for this engagement is a comedy of the present called "In Search of a Sinner," by Charlotte Thompson, and in which she has been meeting with universal recognition for her wonderful advancement as a comedienne. After an absence of several years from this city Miss Russell returns to fulfill every promise of her development which was then made.

Mrs. Lois M. Sperry Confessing to 90 Years Celebrating Her Birthday.

ENJOYING EXCELLENT HEALTH.

Mrs. Claypool, Aged 90, Mrs. Powlison, Aged 88, and Mrs. Sperry, Living Within a Block of Each Other.

Whether North Plainfield is going to beat all records for longevity or not does not seem to bother the inhabitants at all, especially those residents of Fairview avenue who have something worth while to boast of. The reason? Well, Mrs. Lois M. Sperry, who lives with her granddaughter, Mrs. E. S. Stevens, at 65 Fairview avenue, is celebrating today her ninetieth birthday and is enjoying the very best of health to say nothing of joyous anticipations of meeting her gransdon, Rev. John Burton, of Highwood Park, who also will celebrate his natal advent today.

Mrs. Stevens has prepared a little jollification for the day which will include a visit of Mrs. Sperry's descendants and other members of the family, but it will all be a nice social time without any special frills.

As to the reason for pride on the part of the borough—There are several old ladies living on the same street and they are all bright and happy and time has apparently made no further in-roads on her happy life than to make them feel that time is as nothing compared with happiness and pure content. Mrs. Marie B. Claypool, young at 90, and Mrs. Joseph S. Powlison, passed 88, are still counted among the young old people living within a block of each other on the same street.

Mrs. Sperry was teaching school at the age of fifteen and her pupils in the northern part of New York State were often older than she was and as to the pay, well, seventy-five cents per week and "board around" was the way they did it in those days.

The average longevity of Plainfield's citizens according to Health Officer O'Brien is fifty-eight years, which is one of the highest in the Eastern states.

The Daily Press extends hearty congratulations to Mrs. Sperry as well as to the other Fairview avenue residents of splendid old age.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF ELIAS M. BARTLES

The funeral services of Elias M. Bartles, aged eighty-four years, one of the best known residents of Hunterdon county, and father of Mrs. Floyd T. Woodhull, of West Front street, will be held at his late home in German Valley tomorrow noon. Mr. Bartles died on Wednesday, following a stroke of apoplexy on Monday, and he never regained consciousness after the stroke.

Mr. Bartles was born in the vicinity of German Valley and lived there practically all his life. For many years he was connected with the Jersey Central Railroad and afterwards engaged in the lumber business at German Valley, where he was very successful. He acquired vast property interests not only in Hunterdon county, but elsewhere and up to the time of his death owned three of the finest farms in Hunterdon county.

Mr. Bartles was well-known in this city, where he was a frequent visitor. Several years ago he suffered from blindness and underwent three operations in this city, getting considerable relief. He never fully regained his sight, although he was able to get about to some extent. Mr. Bartles was a member of the Lutheran church at German Valley. He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Floyd T. Woodhull, of this city, and Mrs. James R. Cortright, of Newark.

MINISTER'S HORSES IN LIVELY RUNAWAY

There was a lively runaway on Arlington avenue, this morning, when a team of horses belonging to Rev. George Bowers, of Warrenville, which was attached to a stage used to carry children from Warrenville to the North Plainfield school, became frightened in the yard of the Consumers' Coal Company. The horses, which were left alone for a few minutes, bolted out of the yard and ran at break-neck speed through Arlington avenue.

Just before reaching Ninth street, the motorman of an eastbound trolley car saw the team coming towards him and he made a bold attempt to stop the animals, but failed. Running up on the curb in an effort to pass the trolley the horses and wagon crashed into an electric light pole, breaking the harness, the pole and platform of the wagon. The team was uninjured. Further damage was prevented by the crew of the trolley car.

BRITTON C. CLAYTON, AGED 79 YRS., DEAD

Britton C. Clayton, aged seventy-nine years, father of Mrs. David S. Dunavan, of this city, died last night at his home, 746 Woodland avenue, of diabetes with which he had been ill a long time. Mr. Clayton was a former resident of Freehold, where he was well-known. Several years ago he and his wife removed to this city. Mrs. Britton died about three months ago. Mr. Clayton was a member of the Methodist church.

Surviving are three daughters, Mrs. David S. Dunavan and Miss Mary Clayton, the latter living at home, and a married daughter in Asbury Park. The funeral will be held at the late home Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock and the burial will be in Freehold.

Entertained Elizabeth Council.

Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., entertained Elizabeth Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., of Elizabeth, last night, when the initiatory team of the latter council conferred degrees on four candidates, three from this city and one from Elizabeth. The work was performed in a highly satisfactory manner, the visiting team being considered one of the best in the State. After the work Franklin Council served refreshments and there was a social hour. The Elizabeth members made the trip to and from this city in a special trolley car.

CHRISTAIN ENDEAVOR UNION MASS MEETING

At the meeting of the Plainfield Christian Endeavor Union, held last evening in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, it was decided to hold the next mass meeting on Thursday, March 4. The meeting will be in charge of the executive committee of the union and will prepare for the International C. E. convention which is to be held at Atlantic City July 6-12.

Following a suggestion of President Frank Stewart, the plan of awarding the banner for attendance at mass meetings will be discontinued and at the big May meeting the society having the highest percentage of active and associate members present will have the privilege of choosing from their number a delegate to the international convention whose travelling expenses will be paid by the local union. A special congress meeting will be held next Monday evening at the Y. M. C. A. to plan for the mass meeting.

DEMONSTRATIONS OF PHYSICAL EDUCATION

The second and perhaps the better of the two demonstrations of class work in physical education was given in the local High School last evening before an audience which literally packed the auditorium. It was a demonstration which amply afforded the people of this city an opportunity to see the splendid work being accomplished by Miss Addie Parker Jackson in the physical training of the pupils of the public schools of the city. It is safe to say that no exhibition of physical prowess of equal merit has been witnessed before in this city.

The demonstration was presented in two parts and was different from former presentations of physical culture in that the regular school work was shown instead of special work specially practiced for the occasion. The first half of the program included pupils up to the highest grammar grades in various evolutions accompanied by music. The second part consisted of work by the High School pupils.

The former consisted of classroom exercises showing correct position and the exercise of the muscles of respiration and locomotion besides giving an accurate idea of the relationship between mind and body. Pupils from the Irving School demonstrated the value of learning how to resist "school-room deformity." Chairs and desks, such as are used in the schools aided materially in showing the better methods introduced by Miss Jackson.

In the High School pupils there came a revelation for the parents. The absolute correctness of the various poses, actions and execution of maneuvers caused at times gasps of wonderment and surprise. Swedish gymnastics, Danish wand drills and other difficult numbers were given with a freedom from awkwardness which spoke volumes for the system. The girls were not one whit behind their sterner brothers, giving splendid accounts of themselves in every department. The whole exhibition provoked the applause of the entire audience.

P. C. C. DUES RAISED

Active Member to Pay $35 a Year But Jr. Associates Not Abolished.

MEANS INCREASED REVENUE.

They Fight Shy of Making Price For Dinner Higher—Many Members Express Their Views.

The Plainfield Country Club, at a special meeting at the Hartridge Auditorium, last night, voted to increase the dues of active members from $30 to $35 a year, but defeated the proposed amendment to abolish the junior associate class. The vote on the latter proposition was 48 for and 47 against and not being two-thirds of the number voting, was lost. The proposed amendment to increase the dues of active members $5 a year was carried by a vote of 77 to 21.

The lively interest shown in the proposed action of the club was evidenced by the fact that more than one hundred members were present and the proposition to abolish the junior associate class called forth a spirited debate. Nearly all favored a raise in the active member's dues, realizing that the club should have an additional income, but, as stated by President Calkins, the local golf club is the only one having a junior associate class, there was a strong sentiment in favor of retaining the class here and it was so decided.

President Leighton Calkins presided and after the secretary, George S. Clay, read the call for the meeting, which was signed by twenty-seven members, he briefly outlined the purpose. He said that the proposed amendments were not administrative measures, but had been suggested by club members in general.

It was explained by Mr. Calkins that the floating debt of the club had been paid, but that it was felt that more attention should be given this year to the athletic side. He admitted that the social interests of the club had been cared for during the past two years to the detriment of the athletic and it was felt that more should be done for the members who join for the athletic features.

Among the improvements desired are a large dressing room for the women, an enlarged men's locker room, an enlargement of the west piazza, additional tennis courts with greater facilities, an extension of the course to the regulation length, and in addition something must be done to give the club an adequate water supply, the present equipment being worn out. The water proposition alone, Mr. Calkins said, would mean an outlay of approximately from $2,000 to $5,000. The club has $4,000 in treasury bonds, which was explained, would about take care of the water question.

Admitting that the club cannot exist without the social features, Mr. Calkins asserted that it would be possible to run the organization on the present income. Referring to upkeep, he declared that the fair greens are almost bare now, that they were in better condition eight years ago than at present and they must have attention. Good house service had been maintained under the direction of a first-class superintendent, but it was an established fact that the more people cared for in the club restaurant, the more money the club loses.

Mr. Calkins stated that the officers of the club had estimated that by increasing the dues of active members from $30 to $35 and abolishing the junior associate class, thereby placing the women in the associate class with dues at $12 a year, would net the club a total increase of about $2,000, which is needed for betterments. This would be allowing a falling off in the membership of about fifteen or twenty per cent. by reason of the change.

A. H. Atterbury said that although he regretted to do so he did not favor dropping the junior associate class, which was largely responsible for making the club a family one, and he thought the prospect of losing members by the proposed change to be most unfortunate.

S. D. Lounsbury spoke strongly in favor of all the amendments, stating that there is not a club in the country today giving its members as much for the price as the Plainfield Country Club, and he believed that the members should be willing to stand the extra amount. E. J. Patterson also spoke favorable to the amendments. T. M. Day said that he thought that by raising the dues of the active members, which would net the club an increase revenue of about $1,800, together with $800 the club could save this year by reason of not being obliged to pay a floating debt, would be sufficient.

Someone suggested that the price

AMBASSADOR HILL DELIVERS A LECTURE

Ambassador David Hall, who recently returned from his post of duty in Berlin, delivered the first of a series of lectures at Columbia University, New York, yesterday, in the course of which he said: "Statesmen sometimes enjoy immunity because they die, but nations survive, and inevitably reap the results of their misbehavior." Dr. Hill's next Carpentier Lecture at Columbia University will be given in Earl Hall on Monday, the subject being "The State As a Promoter of General Welfare."

Ambassador Hill is a graduate of the Plainfield High School and a former resident of this city. His father, Rev. David J. Hill, was pastor of the Baptist church, in this city, and there are many of the older residents who remember the ambassador to Germany when he lived in Plainfield.

COMPLAINANT FAILED TO APPEAR IN COURT

Because the principal witness against them failed to appear in court this morning, Charles Machen and Warren McCauley, both of Scotch Plains, who were arrested on Monday afternoon, were released and the complaint against them dismissed. In dismissing the case, Judge DeMeza declared that the attitude of complainants who make charges and then refuse to give their testimony was one that is well calculated to raise the ire of the court. "It is too bad that such things should occur," he said, "there is no way of administering justice in a case like this where testimony is wanting to corroborate the complaint entered on the police docket."

According to the police record Mrs. R. F. R. Huntsman, of East Front street, telephoned a complaint to police headquarters on Monday afternoon, declaring that the two accused men were drunk and were beating their horses. Patrolman Vanderweg and Driver O'Gorman were despatched to the scene and returned with the two men as prisoners. They were locked up and according to Vanderweg both were intoxicated. When arraigned on Tuesday morning the men were held in $100 bonds for a hearing this morning.

When the case was called Machen and McCauley produced one witness, Peter Emmons, of the East End, who swore that neither of the accused was drunk on the day in question. He knew all about it because he happaned along just after their wagon lost a wheel and assisted them in repairing the wagon. Emmons declared that neither of the men showed evidence of intoxication. When witnesses for the city were called for there was no response. Detective Sergeant Flynn, in answer to a question by the court, said he had tried to serve a subpoena upon the chief witness, but had been unable to gain admittance to the house yesterday.

Mrs. Huntsman, when seen today, said that she was in New York all day yesterday and that her servants were out. She further said that she made no formal complaint, but had merely reported the matter to the police and expected them to do the rest. She added that she was unaware that a subpoena had been issued or that it was necessary for her to appear.

MANY MOURN FOR MRS. WM. F. TOWNLEY

Accompanied by a large number of mourners the remains of Mrs. William Townley, wife of Captain William Townley, of the fire department, were followed to St. Mary's cemetery this morning and many a sympathetic tear was shed for the departed one who had exhibited such splendid bravery. Mrs. Townley had shown a fortitude which is seldom exhibited and refused to succumb to an affliction which has caused much sorrow in her family. Knowing that she was doomed she bravely bore up against the disease which finally conquered her and for her splendid show of faith is revered today among her friends.

The service was held this morning at St. Mary's church, Father Hogan singing the mass, assisted by Fathers Bogan and Sciolla. The interment was in St. Mary's cemetery and the pallbearers were Charles, Edward and John Townley, John Hopewell, Thomas and David Doyle.

Among the distinguished friends of the family were ex-Chief Charles Purroy, of New York, and Mrs. Purroy, who were intimately acquainted with Captain Townley and his family. Many handsome floral tributes were received with notes of sympathy for the bereaved husband.

AGGRIEVED HUSBAND SEARCHES FOR CHILD

Professor Sheppard, of Yale University, who recently obtained an order from the Connecticut court for the custody of his 2-year-old son Kent, who is with his mother, will have to look for the child in some other place than Cranford. While in Cranford the Sheppards' suit for divorce created considerable gossip.

Mrs. Ruth Badgely Sheppard left Cranford with her 2-year-od son the day before Thanksgiving and has not been seen there since. She told neighbors that she was going out of the State with the child which her husband was anxious to take away from her. The Badgely home on Elizabeth avenue in that place, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Howard M. Badgely, parents of Mrs. Sheppard, has been closed for the winter and yesterday afternoon three Newark vans moved all of the furniture out of the house, under the direction of Mr. Badgely, who locked the place and left town on a New York train.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING FOR FIREMEN

A curious combination of circumstances kept the fire laddies on the jump this morning. A 'phone message at 8:45 o'clock called the department to extinguish a grass fire in the rear of F. T. Woodhull's home on West Front street.

But unfortunately the company assigned to answer calls from that particular box was struggling with a sick horse. Apparatus from headquarters was sent to extinguish this blaze and the men hardly had time to recover their breath when someone with a predisposition to make smoke out of steam rang in an alarm from box 12. Steam from an exhaust pipe was escaping and the department had a run for exercise.

Miss Leahy's Reception.

Miss Sadie Leahy, of East Fifth street, tendered a reception to a number of her young friends one evening this week. The time was enjoyably spent in games and dancing. Music and other entertainment were furnished by three of the guests, Joseph Denny, Edwin Dahl and James Moore, of New York. Among those present were the Misses Tiny O'Neill, Carrie Roland and Emily Guerin, of Westfield; Kathryn Langton, of Rahway; Lucy Hathaway, Anna Doyle, Florence Buckley, Florence Hogan, Chita Pella, C. Leahy, M. Leahy and others.

Wanted For Desertion.

Henry Peavey, of Trenton, arrested yesterday on a charge of disorderly conduct, was arraigned this morning before Judge De Meza in the city court and remanded for a day. According to a telegram from the chief of police of Trenton, Peavy is wanted in that city on a charge of desertion.

MRS. S. GINNA DEAD

Widow of Stephen A. Ginna Succumbs to Grip and Heart Trouble.

HIGHLY ESTEEMED RESIDENT.

Deeply Interested In Church and Charity Work—Two Children Survive.

Mrs. Elizabeth Campbell Ginna, widow of Stephen A. Ginna, who for many years was a prominent resident of this city, died at 4:30 o'clock yesterday at her home, 1107 Watchung avenue, following an illness with grip and heart trouble which developed on Tuesday last. Owing to advanced age, Mrs. Ginna was unable to withstand the attack and suffered great weakness from the heart.

Mrs. Ginna was the daughter of the late Daniel D. Tompkins and Phoebe Baldwin Tompkins, and was born where Llewellyn Park is now located in the Oranges. For many years she resided with her parents at Tompkins Cove, N. Y., which place was named for her father, who was a man of much prominence and influence throughout that section.

Mrs. Ginna had been a resident of Plainfield about forty years, removing here a few years after her marriage, and the Ginna residence on Watchung avenue is one of the handsomest in the city. His large conservatory containing some of the rarest specimens of flowers, had for years been of the greatest interest to lovers of flowers as well as horticulturists not only in this city but throughout this part of the State. Mr. Ginna devoted a great deal of time to the development of rare flowers and took great delight in having his friends visit the conservatory.

Although Mrs. Ginna lived more or less of a quite life, she was deeply interested in religious and charitable work, especially the Children's Home. She was a devout Christian and a faithful member of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church. She was continually giving of her large means to charity, and it has been said that no worthy cause ever suffered when she was sought for aid, and, that she was always generous in her benefactions. Mr. Ginna died six years ago last January. For several terms he was an honored member of the Common Council.

Mrs. Ginna is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Erickson Perkins, of Rochester, N. Y., and one son, Daniel F. Ginna, of this city, who was a former member of the Common Council and is owner of the Woodbrook Farms.

The funeral will be held at the late home, 1107 Watchung avenue, tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, pastor of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, will officiate. The burial will be in Hillside cemetery.

3 YOUTHFUL THIEVES ARE AGAIN REMANDED.

DeMeza, in the city court this morning and remanded until tomorrow when a further examination will be held.

One of the youngsters admitted this morning to having taken candy, pie and eggs, the latter, he declared, he broke and sucked.

Mrs. Mary McCass, of West Third street, appeared against her husband James, in the city court this morning charging him with drunkenness and striking her, besides using vile language to her and their three children. After giving him some sound advice, Judge DeMeza dismissed the case.

The Liquor Calendar.

Drunkenness was the charge against Henry Lewis, colored, and Henry Drake, this morning. Both pleaded guilty to the charge. Lewis was fined $3 and sentence in Drake's case was suspended.

How to Have a Warm House

First—install a BOYNTON "Square Pot," Patented, Furnace in the basement.

Then—in the morning before business and in the evening before retiring, step down and turn the BOYNTON clinkerless, ash-cutting grate. This clears the fire perfectly. Now put in a little coal; set the dampers for the degree of heat you wish, and leave the to do the rest. The BOYNTON is the most reliable house-heater known. It consumes less coal and gives more heat for the coal consumed, than any other heater on the market.

The BOYNTON "Square Pot" never holds dead fire. BOYNTON Boilers are now equipped with this same economical fire box and quick clearing grate. See your dealer about BOYNTON "Square Pot" furnaces and boilers.

INVESTIGATION ABOUT OVER.

What will probably be the last session of the Westfield Council Investigating Committee was held Wednesday night. Councilman J. G. Casey explained some of his former testimony regarding furnishing the town with disinfectants.

E. S. Randolph was called to explain how he had secured building permits. He said that the permits charged to him had been taken out in the name of the persons to whom he had sold the houses, which accounted for the fact that the inspector had not issued permits to him.

Ex-Mayor A. L. Alpers was called, but only reiterated some of his former testimony.

When the testimony is written the committee will make report to the Council and any further action will be in the hands of the Council as a whole.

T. S. Armstrong, the druggist, is detained at his home with an ulcerated tooth.

Miss Helen Armstrong, of Duer street, who has been quite ill for many weeks, is convalescing and able to be about the house.

BASEBALL.

Bill Armour, former manager of the Cleveland Americans, says some of the best batters are weak on balls that split the plate waist high. A ball over the middle of the plate would naturally seem easy to hit, but Armour says most batters hit better when the ball comes over the inside or outside corner.

"Batters who take a long swing, like Lajoie and Stovall, are more likely to hit wide balls than balls that cut the plate. Larry isn't weak on balls over the middle of the plate, like hitters of his type. He can hit anything," said Armour.

"The hitters who step away from the plate are best on balls over the inside corner. The batters who hit balls over the middle are the fellows who chop instead of swinging.

"Willie Keeler was the greatest chop hitter. He used a short bat, gripped it far from the handle, and poked the ball. Chop hitters seldom make long drives."

Fred Snodgrass, the Giant outfielder, who led the National League batters for a long time last season, is weak on balls that split the plate. He hits best when the ball is over the outside corner. Pitchers shoot for the middle with Snodgrass up.

George Stovall has a style of his own. He is a stiff-arm hitter. All his long hits are made on balls over the outside corner. He misses balls over the middle of the plate. They look so easy the batter pays too much attention to getting srength into the swing, and not enough to meeting the ball squarely.

A slow ball over the middle of the plate waist high, is the hardest to hit of all foolers. Batters often fail to judge the speed of a slow ball.

According to reports from Hot Springs, Ark., Slow Joe Doyle, the pitcher, who will make a bid for a steady job with the Providence Grays the coming summer, is showing excellent form and rounding into great condition. If Doyle's arm has recovered from the injury which cut short his career of usefulness in the big leagues, he will be one of the best flingers on Barrow's circuit. Doyle hurt his arm two years ago while pitching to Sam Crawford, of the Detroit Tigers. Something snapped in his arm and it fell limp to his side. The injury to Doyle is but one of many. Addie Joss took a similar chance last year and is paying the penalty.

A heavy rain soaked the diamond at Marlin, Tex., early Wednesday morning and a practise game was impossible for the Giants. McGraw took all his men out in the afternoon, however, and made them go through an hour's work of tossing the ball. Bugs Raymond was so ambitious that he not only fielded for an hour, but wound it up with a run of two miles back to the hotel. As the team now stands Raymond is in the best shape of the staff. The members of the Giant squad were guests at a fish fry given by the Commercial Club of Marlin.

Players of the Montreal Eastern League club report on Monday next at Newport News for spring training. The roster of the team is as follows: Catchers, Roth, Curtis, Hardy, Bridges, Morin; pitchers, Barberich, Buchell, Dubec, Glaze, Sitton, Carroll, Dorner, Leclaire, Savage, Judd, Ashton; first base, Gandil; second base, French; third base, Yeager; shortstop, Holly; utility infielders, Purtell, Nattress; outfielders, Miller, Demmitt, Hanford, Covelski, Jones, Bailey, Flynn.

Tom Clark, the Cincinnati National League catcher, who was rendered unconscious in a practice game Tuesday through a collision at the plate with Severoid, was able to be out yesterday. A light rain fell at Hot Springs about noon and the exhibition games between the Pittsburg and Cincinnati first teams and their respective second teams were deferred. "Cy" Young has gone to Little Rock to join the Cleveland team in practise work.

The first team of the New York Americans defeated the University of Georgia nine Wednesday at Athens, Ga., by a score of 9 runs to 3. Warhop, Caldwell and Vaughn did the twirling for the Yankees, while Walsh and Blair performed behind the bat. Catcher Ed Sweeney, who has been ill for the past few days, has gone to Atlanta, where he will remain until the team arrives in the town. Manager Hal Chase secured four of the thirteen hits credited to the Hilltoppers.

The Montgomery Southern League Club defeated the Philadelphia Nationals Wednesday at Montgomery by a score of 8 to 7. The Phillies put up a big holler all through the game because Umpire Barr was said to be favoring the home team. With the score a tie, Philadelphia managed to secure a tally in the ninth session. Montgomery went Dooin's crowd one better by sending two men over the plate before a batter had been retired.

The Philadelphia Athletic Yannigans took a fall out of the Regulars Wednesday at Savannah, Ga., and won out 5 to 0. The Yannigans had the services of Catcher Jack Lapp and Pitchers Coombs, Bender and Morgan. Derrick, who held down third base for the winning nine, slammed out two singles and a double.

The Athletics left Savannah Wednesday night on their return north and will stop at Columbia and Charleston, S. C., on the way to Philadelphia. Three games will be played at Charleston, and the champions will reach Columbia next Monday.

Charley Comiskey paid $2,500 for Matty McIntyre because the left-handed outfielder was such a demon slugger against Chicago's pitchers. McIntyre hits left-handed, but in spite of this fact he invariably clouted the White Sox southpaws all over the lot. Commy figures Matty worth the money just to get him away from the enemy.

The Boston club has received the signed contract of Pitcher Arthur Butler, the Fall River recruit.

The Giants open the season at the Polo Grounds on Saturday, April 8, with the Yale team as opponents.

Manager Bresnahan, of the Cardinals, is reported as having selected Jackson, Tenn., as the spring training place for his team.

The Chicago Americans defeated the San Antonio (Texas League) team again yesterday, 8 to 2. Metz and Brewer, of San Antonio, and Collins, of Chicago, made home runs.

ELKS' BOWLING LEAGUE.

Jersey City Elks captured two games out of three in a league bowling match on the Newark Elks' alleys last night. The affair was interesting and there was much good pinning. In the first game the locals were twenty-four pins to the good, but in the next the visitors jumped to 980 and won easily. In the final affair there was a battle royal, the Jersey City five, with 966, winning by twenty-one pins. The scores:

EX NIHILO NIHIL FIT.

Excluding the confessional there are very few places in this mundane sphere where the weaknesses of man can be so frequently shown as in an editorial sanctum. When a citizen thinks that he has a grievance or out of sheer devilment wants to get a whack at somebody, if he hasn't got "sand"—and too many have not—he runs to a newspaper office and demands to know why the journal doesn't "rip" another fellow "up the back." Of course he mentions the fact, in a whisper, to leave his name out of it. Even public officials, sworn to see that city affairs are run properly, and ministers of the Gospel, whose office it is to preach righteousness, are not free from this evil. As the Rahway News-Herald sets forth in its "pitchfork" column: "The office of a newspaper which is known to have the courage to express its opinions on matters of public interest is besieged with complaints of citizens who have a grievance, but who invariably depart with the request: 'Now don't use my name—give 'em rats, but let me out of it.' To be sure, that's what a newspaper is for! It should take all the responsibility and all the blame for appearing as a critic of public affairs." If an editor would follow the advice of the majority of such "disinterested" men of pronounced civic virtue, his newspaper plant would either be decorated with a sheriff's sign, if it was not burned down, or the editor himself would enjoy a long rest in a cell at public expense.

TWO YEARS IN PRISON FOR SHOOTING WOMAN.

Judge Case, of Somerville, sitting for Judge Atwater Wednesday sentenced Arthur B. Matthews, a Roselle youth, to State prison for two years on an indictment charging him with assaulting with intent to kill Mrs. Albert Johnson, of Westfield avenue, Roselle Park. The same sentence was imposed on two other indictments, but the sentences are to run concurrently. Matthews, it was claimed, shot at and slightly wounded Mrs. Harry Rodgers, a young woman with whom he was infatuated and who is alleged to have spurned his advances. Mr. Johnson was shot through the shoulder upon going to Mrs. Rodgers' assistance. Mrs. Johnson was threatened on the same occasion. The shooting took place in Westfield avenue, Roselle Park, on the night of December 29, 1910.

THE FORUM.

Warren Township School Meeting.

Editor, The Daily Press:

My attention has been called to an article in your paper of the twenty-second inst., headed "Warren Township Elects Four School Trustees," which states that Joel and Horace Codington and John Bormann were much in evidence trying to elect their candidates but failed.

Now for myself I want to say that this is one of those canards made up out of the whole cloth, for I took little or no interest in it, other than being present, and as for Joel Codington and John Borman I do not believe that they did. There was no opposition, no routing, no excitement. The vote on the appropriation was 59 for $2,600 and 50 for $2,000.

As for the election of members of the board, there was none, legally, in my opinion.

While I do not know who furnished the information for the article in your paper, it is so full of exaggeration and hyperbole that it savors of one of our familiar figures known in both business and political circles as "Crooked" Henry. I do not blame the newspaper, but I do blame the man who gave the false information.

HORACE CODINGTON.

MISSIONARIES GATHER IN LARGE NUMBERS.

As this paper goes to press Trinity Reformed church is rapidly filling with attendants upon the preliminary meeting to the great missionary jubilee.

Forty-five churches are represented in the gathering representing all denominations. Mrs. Frederick G. Mead is in charge.

Central Lodge, A. O. U. W., Affair.

At the regular meeting of Central Lodge, A. O. U. W., last evening, it is said that one of the most enjoyable social events of the season was held. The evening was given up to sociability after the business meeting and a large number of members was present. Amendments to the by-laws suggested at the convention last December were discussed and the meeting was followed by a smoker and a jolly good time. The order is in a prosperous financial condition.

Commissioners of Deed.

The following Plainfielders received their commissions as commissioners of deed from the Secretary of State, yesterday: Dr. Albert Pittis, H. H. Coward, W. L. Hetfield, Jr., V. W. Nash, Jr., Frank J. Hubbard, B. Frank Coriell, A. E. Crone and Miss L. M. Stryker.

Vice Chancellor Walker has granted an order to show cause why an injunction should not be issued to restrain Somerville Water Company from laying water mains in Somerville.

YOUNG MANLEY BREAKS SWIMMING RECORD

The swimming tournament which has been in progress at the Y. M. C. A. for sometime, is attracting considerable interest. Physical Director T. G. Whittaker has been giving special attention to this sport and is developing some good swimmers. Last night Alfred Manley broke the local association record of 31 seconds for forty-six yards, covering the distance in 29 seconds. Last night's results in the senior department follow:

	Elapsed Time	H'dcap.	Actual Time.
Manley	47	9	29
Fritts	45	7	34
Sanford	43	9	31
Newmiller	52	12	40
Thompson	56	13	43
Dunham	60	12	48

These points were scored: Manley 5, Thompson 5, Sanford 5, Fritts 3, Newmiller, 3 Dunham 3. Points to date: Manley 10, Sanford 10, Fritts 8, Newmiller 8, Thompson 8, Dunham 8, Hansen 3, Johnson 3, Adell 3. On March 30, there will be a 69-yard swim, handicap. Tonight the boys' swimming team will go to Montclair and take part in the Boys' State meet.

Weather One Year Ago.

Edward Willis, of South avenue, who keeps a record of the weather, in commenting on the present unusual cold snap, says that one year ago tomorrow Plainfielders were enjoying summer heat and a year ago March 29 the thermometer was 82 degrees. Just after that there was a cold snap. At 8 o'clock this morning the thermometer registered 20 degrees.

Jersey Central's Denial.

The rumor that the Pennsylvania Railroad had offered for sale its terminal facilities, docks and other appurtenances to the Central Railroad of New Jersey, was denied at the offices of the Central in New York this afternoon. An official of the company said the report was a "delayed" report from Philadelphia, or in other words a "slowtown" message.

Linen Shower for Bride-Elect.

A linen shower was given last night by some friends in honor of Miss Mabel Cecelia Peterson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Peterson, of Berckman street. Her marriage to Daniel Luke Pierce, of Newark, for which invitations have been issued, takes place on Thursday, April 6.

Not "Pitiless Publicity."

BILLS THROUGH SENATE.

With many signs of weariness and yet with considerable good nature the members of the Senate stayed in session Wednesday night until 10 o'clock and disposed of a mass of business. Several of the Senators went home in the afternoon so no partizan matters were taken up, and most of the bills that did pass just managed to get enough votes to put them through.

The Senate will convene again next Monday night at 8 o'clock.

Among the matters disposed of were:

House 293, authorizing Hudson county to construct a short-cut highway from Union Hill to Weehawken.

House 306, placing the six stablemen in the Newark fire department on the rolls as firemen.

House 334, amends the East Orange charter.

Senate 209, increases the amount to be spent by first-class counties on hospitals for contagious diseases.

House 300, annexing Tuxedo Park to South Orange village.

House 80, one of the series to abolish the office of register of deeds in Bergen, Mercer and Middlesex counties.

Senate 207, regulating the receipt and disbursement of State moneys.

Among other bills passed in the Senate in the afternoon were:

Senate 139, allowing the New Jersey reformatory commissioners to judge unruly inmates as incorrigibles.

Senate 164, allows certain acknowledgments to be taken before notaries public as well as before commissioners of deeds.

Senate 118, provides for the renewal of worn out water mains in first-class cities (applies to Hudson).

Senate 174 (Osborne), provides that reduction in the size of the board of chosen freeholders shall not affect any civil service employe.

Senate 172, increasing to ten days notice to be given in sales in bulk cases.

Senate 181, enabling Hudson county to meet a deficiency in its appropriations for courts.

Senate 206, provides for transfer of incorrigible inmates of Rahway Reformatory to State Prison, upon authority of the Commissioner of Charities and Corrections.

House 264, allows boards of health in second-class cities to send its health officer to medical conventions.

Senate 212, incorporates the borough of Port Norris, Cumberland county.

House 368, makes it unlawful to have in one's possession lobsters less than eight inches in length.

Senate 171, incorporates the borough of Mantoloking, Ocean county.

Senate 176, validates certain drainage bonds in Bergen county.

William G. Besler, vice president and general manager of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, left yesterday with his wife and children for a two-weeks' stay in Bermuda.

Number 3

THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

The questions were further discussed by E. B. Shoemaker, H. R. Munger and Messrs. Buckley, Dunn and Corey, treating it in its different phases.

The question to abolish the junior associate class was considered first, this causing the greatest discussion, and then a vote was taken as to increasing the dues of active members, which was decided without much argument. Otherwise the club fees will remain as heretofore.

There will also be exhibits from the following institutions, consisting of photographic views and industrial work: State Home for the Care and Training of Feeble-Minded Women at Vineland; New Jersey State Village for Epileptics at Skillman; New Jersey State Hospital at Trenton; New Jersey State Hospital at Morris Plains; New State Reformatory at Rahway; New eJrsey State Home for Boys at Jamesburg, and the New Jersey State Home for Girls at Trenton.

In conection with the exhibition there will be each day during the conference stereopticon illustrations of the work of the public playgrounds, tuberculosisi commissions, tenement house commissions, public baths, open-air schools and the shade tree commission of Newark.

At the Tuesday afternoon meeting April 4, when the topic for discussion will be "Home in the Country," the first and principal address will be by Willett M. Hays, assistant secretary of agriculture, Washington, D. C. He will speak upon "Country Life."

THE MAKING AND DOCTORING OF GEMS.

As the demand has grown for gems and ornamental stones, efforts have been made to enlarge the supply artificially. Defective specimens receive special treatment, inferior stones are dyed, numerous imitations are made and now genuine stones are produced in the labortory—the artificial ruby being practically identical in composition with the natural.

Flaws in gem stones are removed—defective rubies, for instance, being packed in reduced iron and then heated to a high degree. Smoky quartz is made clear by a similar mthod, and the color in the carnelian and pink topaz is also due to high temperature.

Some stones are dyed as a regular industry. Chalcedony consists of layers of silica of different degrees of porosity and it is converted into onyx by soaking several days in honey and water at about ninety-eight degrees C., and then placing in strong sulphuric acid to carbonize the sugar absarbed.

Natural brilliancy is imparted by treating with oil. Blue stones are obtained by the use of potassium ferrocyandic and ferric chloride, or copper sulphate and ammonia and other tints result from suitable reagents.

Were Harmonized.

In his late visit to Ohio "Nick" Longworth met his old colored friend Moses Carson, who lives near Columbus, and said: "How is it now, Uncle Mose?"

"All cool as a cowcumber since de 'lection—one Captain Roosevelt, from Dakota, I think, come here and spoke all kinds ob pollyticks, an' since dat all de decent Publicans am dead shore harmonized wid de Demy-cracks," said Uncle Mose.—National Monthly.

Will Hold Annual Supper.

The annual supper of the Girls' Mission Club of the Congregational church will be held at the church this evening from 6 to 8 o'clock.

ICELAND IN SUMMER.

When the Sheen of Sunset Greets the Golden Glow of Sunrise.

Iceland! The name itself is a barrier to tourist travel. But let the tourist ignore prejudice and embark at Copenhagen or Leith and he will find a delightful voyage over a smiling summer sea if he should go during June, July or August. He will be hardly more than two days out of sight of land—the farreaching rockbound coast of Scotland or the snow crowned peaks of Iceland—but the journey across will occupy about four days. For his amusement the dolphins will tumble, the whales will spout, the seal will swim and the sea birds will fly, and there will be glorious sunrises and sunsets, with hardly more than two hours of night intervening. When he finally reaches Iceland he will see the sun set about 11:40 o'clock and rise again shortly after 12 o'clock, the golden glow of the sunset mingling with the golden glow of the sunrise.

All these delights cannot be assured to the winter traveler to Iceland. In fact, he will be obliged to keep his lamp burning until 10:30 in the morning and then light it again at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.—Mrs. W. F. Crafts in Christian Herald.

A VOLCANIC MONUMENT.

Wonderful Old Balancing Rock Near Portland, Ore.

One of the most remarkable rocks in the world is that known as the "balancing rock," which stands on the bank of the Willamette river a short distance above the city of Portland, Ore. Rising from a broad base is a small column roughly round in shape. Just above this is a huge mass of rock bearing a tree on the summit, the total height of rock and column being about a hundred feet.

Although a great deal larger and heavier than the pillar on which it stands, the big rock is very accurately balanced. For how many centuries this odd freak has stood not even the wisest scientists are able to determine, but it has evidently been there for a very long period.

The entire rock is of a volcanic nature, and the most singular thing about it is the fact that the knob and pillar are entirely disjointed from one another. Wind and weather no doubt are slowly wearing the "balancing rock" away, but the process is so imperceptible that, failing some unforeseen catastrophe, the monument will probably endure for many centuries.—Wide World Magazine.

Making Up an Actor.

In making up an amateur actor should remember that as little paint as possible should be used, for, while it is easy to disguise by a thick mask of pigment, the heavier the makeup the more difficult it is to convey sensitive emotional variations by the changing expression of the face. If it is possible to arrange one's own hair in a way suitable to the character so much the better, for, though it may in no way seem more real than a wig, it will prove infinitely more comfortable. When the actor looks as much like the part as he possibly can without the aid of artificial disguise he begins to apply nose paste, paint and powder, obliterating one characteristic and accentuating another, painting the eyebrows out and redrawing them, changing the color of the skin, putting shadows around the eyes and sinister lines running from the nostrils. He adds a roughly shaped beard or mustache of crape hair if the character demands it.—Harper's Weekly.

Wonderful Hats.

On one occasion Lincoln was presented with two fine hats, each by a different hatmaker, neither knowing that the other had made such a contribution. In the course of events they called upon the president, and it so happened that both called at the same time. When both found themselves in the presence of the executive they asked how he had liked the hats they had sent him, and, taking advantage of the opportunity of securing a statement of superiority of one or the other make, the president was asked to state his preference. To many men such a question would be very embarrassing, but to Lincoln not at all. He took the hat, one in each hand, and then replied gravely, but with a mischievous twinkle in his keen eyes:

"Gentlemen, your hats do mutually surpass each other!"

An Honored Pig.

A four footed discoverer is honored in the town hall of Luneburg, Prussia. It is a memorial to a pig that breathed its last 300 years ago. This consists of a handsome glass case inclosing a ham in excellent preservation, and underneath a black marble tablet with the following inscription in gold letters: "Passersby, here you behold the mortal remains of the pig which acquired for itself imperishable glory by the discovery of the salt springs of Luneburg."

Harvest Time.

Teacher—Now, Earlie, tell us when is the harvest season? Earlie—From November to March. Teacher—Why, Earlie, I am surprised that you should name such barren months. Who told you they were the harvest season? Earlie—Pa. He's a plumber.—Milwaukee News.

Both Recovering.

Friend—Ah, doctor, how did you make out with that cranky patient of yours? Doctor—Oh, we're both on the road to recovery. He's able to be about and I am suing for my bill.—Exchange.

Nature fits all her children with something to do.—Lowell.

Lillian Russell, "In Search of a Sinner," at the Plainfield Theatre Tuesday Night.

The Moonrakers.

"In the English county of Wiltshire," said a customs official, "the natives are called 'moonrakers.' There's a Wiltshire story, over a century old, about some rustics who were found one night raking away in a pond at the reflection of the moon, which they took for a cheese.

"That's a very good story, a very funny skit on the men of Wiltshire, but ask a Wiltshire man about it and with a contented chuckle he will say:

"'Oh, yes, people tell us how they give the name o' 'moonrakers' to us Wiltshire people bekase a passel o' stoopids one night tried to rake the shadder o' the moon out o' the brook, takin' it for a thin cheese. But that's the wrong end o' the story. It's altogether the wrong end. Them chaps as was doin' this was smuggiers and they was fishin' up some kegs o' brandy and only pretended to rake out a cheese. The policeman as axed 'em what they was about had a good laugh at 'em, but, by Harry! they had a better laugh at him when they got home with the stuff.'"

The Tough Chicken.

There are several ways of transforming a venerable fowl into a respectable family piece de resistance. In fact, by the following method such fowls have been made as tender as spring chickens: Let the bird, after drawing, seasoning and stuffing, simmer until over half done. Then place it in the oven with a piece of pork laid over its breast. Pour the liquor over and around the roast in the pan. Finish the cooking in a very hot oven, basting frequently with the drippings. When ready to serve skim off any superfluous fat that may be in the pan before preparing the gravy. The pork prevents the fowl from becoming dry, and if a small onion is also added it will have a more savory flavor. The simmering lessens its toughness. In fact, slow simmering is just the thing for any tough meat, but it should simmer, not boil. Boiling will toughen the tenderest of meat.

A Death Lure.

According to tradition, Kenith, the legendary king of Scotland, was allured to his death in a most novel manner. Kenith had slain a son and brother of Fennella, who to be avenged ordered Wiltus, a famous silversmith, to construct a death dealing statue of silver. In its right hand the statue held a basin and in the left hand an apple of pure gold, both set with diamonds and other precious stones. To touch the apple was to defy death, it being so arranged that any one guilty of such vandalism would be immediately riddled by poisoned arrows shot from openings in the body of the statue. Kenith was invited to inspect the wonder, and, as Fennella had hoped, he tried to pluck the precious imitation fruit. When his hand touched the apple he was wounded by the arrows and died where he fell.

Animal Life on Venus.

"There are many physical reasons for thinking that if any other planet besides the earth is inhabited it is probably Venus," says Professor Pickering. "It is about the same size as the earth, and its density is about the same. The force of gravity upon its surface is only slightly less than that on the earth. The temperature on Venus is probably the same as in our own tropics, and the dense atmosphere may be of a composition such as enveloped the earth when in the carboniferous period. As to the existence of intelligent life, the question is still open. If it is ever established that the planet Venus is inhabited it will be less surprising than if the same were proved conclusively of any other planet, owing to the similarity in many respects of Venus and the earth."

A Cotton Legend.

Cotton was the theme of one of the most fabulous nature stories on its first introduction into Europe. Travelers related that in Tartary there grew a shrub and that when its ripe fruit was cut open within was "a lyttle Beaste in flesche, in bone and blode as though it were a lytle Lamb with outer wolle." The flesh of this "vegetable lamb" was eaten, ran the story, and the wool made into cloth. The basis of the legend is the way in which the cotton pod ripens and bursts, showing the white fluffy raw cotton, which closely resembles wool. Raw cotton is still called "cotton wool."

A Hint.

Teacher—I have been trying for some time to get the room so quiet that we could hear a pin drop. I have dropped the pin several times, but you have been making so much noise that it has been impossible to hear it. What do you think we had better do, children? Reddy Backrow—Tie a dumbbell to it next time, teacher.—Brooklyn Life.

A Reversion.

"Matrimony," said a modern benedict the other day, "produces remarkable revolutions. Here am I, for instance, in a few short months changed from a sighing lover to a living sigh."—Illustrated Bits.

The Time to Think.

A man who is really thoughtful of the family name should begin to think about it quite awhile before [illegible] to him to enter the name of [illegible] on the police blotter.—Atchison Globe.

Deeds That Count.

Maud—Why don't you propose to Will? Harry is so much [illegible]. Edith—Yes; but Will owns a [illegible] timbre American.

In the Millinery Mirror

The latest fashions in hats in European capitals, as well as in the Metropolis are reflected accurately in the hats on view in our Millinery Salon.

Our trimmers, experts not only in copying the best of the foreign ideas, merge their own thoughts with those of the Parisians and evolve hats that have a distinctive character and that set a standard for Hahne & Co. millinery difficult to approach.

This skill in trimming enters into not only the higher priced hats running from say $50 to $100, but is seen in the most modestly priced of our specialty lines.

Take, for instance, the hats we sell at $4.75. It is truly wonderful what beautiful hats can be produced at this price. They have much of the style of the higher-priced hats and often are taken to be hats that cost double the money. Many new ones will be ready at $4.75 tomorrow, fresh from our millinery gardens.

Pluck them while they may be had.

At $7.75 we specialize hats that are still more beautifully trimmed than the $4.75, having a little more distinctive character and trimmings of a finer sort.

At $9.95 a still better line of hats, beautifully trimmed with finer materials and in a variety of shapes and color effects, most pleasing, indeed.

Untrimmed Hats, of Black and Burnt Chip, that should sell at $1.95, will be priced Saturday at only 95c

If you choose to pay $12.50 to $14 for a hat you will find a wide variety to choose from, and you can secure hats full of originality and beauty.

Children's Hats, ready to wear, many beautiful styles to choose from, the popular mushroom being predominant, here at from 65c to $4.95.

Flowers including pretty rosebuds and gorgeous hydrangeas will be specialized tomorrow at only 39c.

Sweet Peas and Rosebud Clusters, special priced for Saturday only 33c.

Buttercup and Blossom Wreaths—fine for children's hats—a complete trimming in themselves; Saturday at only 69c.

The prices fixed for Saturday give you values such as we are positive no other Newark store will approach, namely—$8.50, $10.50, $16.50 and $19.50.

THE VALUE OF INITIALS.

Nothing gives so distinctive a touch as initials. Whether in silver stationery, handkerchiefs and household linen, a monogram or initials enhance the value of a gift.

There is much difference in engraving, so it pays to get your silver or jewelry where you know artistic marking is done.

Letter and note paper for formal correspondence is invariably marked. Most women have several dies, one with their address for business and ordinary corespondence, the other with monogram or crest for personal notes.

Just now the letters woven into circles, diamonds or oblongs and placed at the upper left-hand corner of note paper or card are extremely popular. Conservative women remain true to the three-block initials, rather small, placed in centre of paper at left hand corner.

The hostess who entertains frequently has her monogram or crest stamped on gilt or silver-edged place cards, which are kept always on hand for emergencies. The die from one's monogram paper can be used, the stamping being done in gold or silver unless to match a special decoration.

A 25-cent handkerchief will take quite a new air if the initials of the owner are embroidered on it. The lettering for ordinary ones is in small, plain letters across one corner; for more elaborate ones a monogram or initials inside a medallion is preferred.

Bureau covers, table scarfs, line pillow slips and centerpieces which can be picked up cheaply at white sales will look vastly better if marked with initials.

Bolster rolls of plain linen are better looking if they have three five-inch initials worked in the middle. They should be heavily paded to stand in bold relief.

PRUNE SOUFFLE.

Remove the pits from a large cupful of stewed prunes and chop fine. Add the whites of three eggs and a cup of sugar beaten to a stiff froth. Mix well, turn into a buttered dish and bake thirty minutes in a moderate oven. Serve with whipped cream. If it is desired to cook this in individual cups, butter the cups, fill only two-thirds full, to allow for puffing up of the eggs, and set the cups in a pan of water to bake. Some like a dash of cinnamon in this.

Take one pint of stewed prunes, one-third pint thick cream, whites of six eggs and raspberry or loganberry jelly. After thoroughly draining the prunes, pit them and rub them through a colander; avoid rubbing the skins through as much as possible. Beat the white of the eggs to a stiff froth; then by degrees beat this into sifted prunes. If not sweet enough to suit the taste add a teaspoonful of sugar.

The delicacy of this dish depends largely upon the thoroughness with which the ingredients are beaten together. When well beaten together pour into a glass dish. Whip the cream and spread evenly over the top of pudding, then fleck the whipped cream with bits of the jelly. Serve with cream, or, if preferred, with a custard made from the yolks of six eggs.

The yolks of the eggs may be used for boiled custard, which is richer when made entirely from yolks than when made from yolks and whites together.

DANGER OF OVER-EXPANSION.

A safe business is one that has grown healthily from year to year; its ramifications, like the roots of the tree, having spread in all directions. If sales fall in one part of the country, those from other parts may be relied on to mourish the business and keeq it alive. Strength and prestige should come from age in a business, and on the other hand, one that has grown by leaps and bounds is likely to lack strength for the same reasons that apply to the trees. While it flourishes under favorable conditions it lacks foothold andbalance to weather's hard storms.

Probably the greatest temptation a business man encounters is to expand his business rapidly to meet expected demands. He realizes that he must go forward or backward, that he cannot stand still. Growth being generally regarded as synonymous with progress, it is perfectly natural to expand rapidly under favorable conditions. But the conservative business men when tempted to expand rapidly will consider carefully what the prospects are of surviving a period of hard times. It is better to turn away some business than to expand to such proportions that on bad season will ruin a business that has taken years to build up. "Make haste slowly" is still a good adage—Machinery.

STATE NEWS BRIEFS

The Friends' High School at Moorestown is closed owing to an epidemic of mumps.

Extensive interior improvements will be made at St. Mary's Hall, Burlington, during the Easter vacation.

Caught under the trucks of a train he was about to board at Haddonfield Wednesday, John H. Stevenson, a seventeen-year-old messenger of the Pennsylvania Railroad, had his right leg badly torn. He was taken to Cooper Hospital, Camden.

Isaiah F. Barnes, of Bridgeton, died Wednesday at the age of sixty-three years. He was for many years prominent in Bridgeton's Republican politics. He is survived by a widow and a brother, Rev. Charles H. Barnes, who is a member of the New Jersey Methodist Conference.

By a vote of four to four Salem City Council Wednesday night refused to grant any liquor licenses, and as a result after 11 o'clock tonight all saloons will be closed. The nearest saloon then will be seven miles away, and the roads in that direction are not the best.

When arraigned before Recorder Stackhouse in Camden Wednesday, William Dixon, charged with robbing his employer, William Horag, 510 South street, offered to return the money and pay the costs of prosecution. The recorder said it was not within his power to effect a settlement, and held Dixon in $500 bail. He had stolen $25.

The shad fishing season was officially opened at Burlington Wednesday, after a delay of a fortnight, owing to the prolonged cold weather. Louis Wade and Cotton Burr made the first cast, using a new 110-fathom net. Motor boats will be used almost exclusively in operating the big drifting seines this year, and by the end of the week a score of crews will be working in every tide.

Claiming that with a mystic lodestone he could convert borrowed capital into fifty times the original sum, Henry Williams, said by county detectives to be a slick negro swindler, victimized several Burlington negroes who were willing to lend him from $1 to $5 each to see his charm work. Arrested at the railroad station, Williams was disarmed of a razor and a dirk. He was held on a charge of carrying concealed weapons.

Attired in the flimsiest of summer apparel, two maids romped out on the Atlantic City strand Wednesday at noon, and to the amazement of a crowd that quickly lined the railing of the boardwalk, plunged bodily into the surf. The bathers paddled about for a time as if they were thoroughly enjoying the experience, and after emerging from the cold water they started on a run for St. James place, first having donned sweaters and coats.

For the fourth time within about two years the suit of Mrs. Amelia Sparks and others against Charles Ross and others was begun in the Camden Circuit Court Wednesday, and it is expected that the case will occupy the attention of Judge Cole the remainder of the week. A fortune is involved in the outcome of the suit, which was instituted to learn whether Edmund B. Ross was lawfully married to Mary Cavanaugh, by whom there were nine children, the only surviving ones being Charles Ross and Jennie R. Thornton.

GOLF.

Considering the soft nature of the ground, Dave Honeyman, professional at the Forest Hill Field Club, is playing fine golf these days. In a four-ball match recently the Scot reeled off a 73, coming home like a wizard in 31. Honeyman's most spectacular play came at the 300-yard seventeenth hole, which he made in 2. A drive of 250 yards and a beautifully played mashie shot did the trick. It is the first time this hole has been made in 2.

Provided present plans do not fall through, the first junior tournament under the auspices of the Metropolitan Golf Association will be decided in the fall. The Plainfield Country Club, which will entertain the boys, favors a date toward the latter part of September, in the belief that the youngsters would have the advantage of the summer's vacation for practice. However, the final selection will be left to the association, and whatever time is set will be agreeable to the Plainfield club.

If the junior meeting is deferred until the autumn it is not unlikely that the boys will find the course slightly changed. Land secured by the club some time ago is now nearing a point when it can be put into commission. This extra property will add fully five hundred yards to the total.

One of the new holes will be 580 yards, another 485, and two more slightly in excess of a quarter of a mile. The outward and homeward journeys will be nearly alike in distance—about three thousand yards.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

Lillian Russell, in a new play, "In Search of a Sinner," is to be the attraction at the Plainfield theatre next Tuesday, March 28. The play was written for the star by Charlotte Thompson and is in three acts, depicting as many varying scenes of urban and suburban life in the social set of New York.

Comedy of the better sort, music that has more charm than to merely soothe the savage beast, comedians who understand their business, and high grade vaudeville specialties, contributed by real headliners, are promised in the revised edition of "McFadden's Flats," the foremost of all comedy productions, which will be seen at the Plainfield theatre, Thursday, March 30, matinee and night. From all accounts there is not a dull or monotonous moment in the entire offering, which without doubt is one of the most up to date and enduring entertainment on the boards today. The production has been augmented with an enlarged chorus of thirty bewitching and clever young ladies who know how to wear stunning gowns in befitting style and grace; new scenery, elaborate stage and electrical effects and song hits of the tuneful, catchy variety.

By F. Marion Crawford

Author of "Saracinesca," "Arethusa," etc.

Illustrations by A. Weil

Copyright, 1907, by F. Marion Crawford.

The hours passed, and the sun rose higher in the sky and struck deeper into the shady well, till he was almost overhead, and there was scarcely any shadow left. It became very hot and stifling, because the passage through which the air had entered with the water was shut up. Then the traveler took off his loose jacket, and opened his flannel shirt at the neck, and turned up his sleeves for coolness, and he crept backwards into the hollow where the ruby mine was, to shelter himself from the sun. But Baraka edged away to the very foot of the cliff, where there remained a belt of shade, even at noon; and as she sat there she took the hem of her one garment in her hands and slowly fanned her little feet. Neither he nor she had spoken for many hours, and she could see that in the recess of the rock he was sitting as before, with his forehead against his hands that were clasped on his knees, in the attitude and bearing of despair.

He began to be athirst now, in the heat. If he had not known that there was no water he could easily have done without it through a long day, but knowledge that there was none, and that he was never to drink again, parched his life and his throat and his tongue till it felt like a dried fig in his mouth. He did not feel hunger, and indeed he had a little food in a wallet he carried; but he could not have eaten without water, and it did not occur to him that Baraka might be hungry. Perhaps, even if he had known that she was, he would not have given her of what he had; he would have kept it for himself. What was the life of a wild hill-girl compared with his? But the vulture was watching him, as well as Baraka, and would not move from its pinnacle till the end, though days might pass.

Baraka was not thirsty yet, because she had drunk her fill in the morning, and was not used to drink often; it was enough that she could look at the man she loved, for the end would come soon enough without thinking about it. All day long the traveler crouched in the hollow of the ruby cave, and Baraka watched him from her place; when it grew dark the vulture on the pinnacle of rock thrust its ugly head under its wing. As soon as Baraka could not see any more she curled herself up on the white sand like a little wild animal and went to sleep, though she was thirsty.

It was dawn when she awoke, and her linen garment was damp with the dew, so that the touch of it refreshed her. The traveler had come out and was lying prone on the sand, his face buried against his arm, as soldiers sleep in a bivouac. She could not tell whether he was asleep or not, but she knew that he could not see her, and she cautiously sucked the dew from her garment, drawing it up to her mouth and squeezing it between her lips.

It was little enough refreshment, but it was something, and she was not afraid, which made a difference. Just as she had drawn the edge of her shift down and round her ankles again, the man turned on his side suddenly, and then rose to his feet. For an instant he glared at her, and she saw that his blue eyes were bloodshot and burning; then he picked up the heavy camel bag, and began to make his way round what had been the beach of the pool, towards the passage through which they had entered, and which was now a dry cave, wide below, narrow at the top, and between six or seven feet high. He trod carefully and tried his way, for he feared the quicksand, but he knew that there was none in the passage, since he had walked through the water and had felt the way hard under his feet. In a few moments he disappeared under the rock.

Baraka knew what he meant to do; he was going to try to dig through the dam at the entrance to let the water fin, even if he could not get out; but she did not move, for in that narrow place and in the dark she could not have helped him. She sat and waited. By and by he would come out, drenched with sweat and yet parching with thirst, and he would glare at her horribly again; perhaps he would be mad when he came out and would kill her because she had brought him there.

After some time she heard a very faint sound overhead, and when she looked up the vulture was gone from his pinnacle. She wondered at this, and her eyes searched every point and crevice of the rock as far as she could see, for she knew that the evil bird could only have been frightened away; and though it fears neither bird nor beast, but only man, she could not believe that any human being could find a foothold near to where it had perched.

For some seconds, perhaps for a whole minute, she saw nothing, though she gazed up steadily, then she saw that a small patch of snowy white was moving slowly on the face of the cliff, at some distance above the place where the vulture had been. She bent her brows in the effort to see more by straining her sight, and meanwhile the patch descended faster than it seemed possible that a man could climb down that perilous steep. Yet it was a man, she knew from the first, and soon she saw him plainly, in his loose shirt and white turban, and with a long gun slung across his back. Nearer still, and he was down to the jutting pinnacle where the vulture had sat, and she saw his black beard; still nearer by a few feet and she knew him, and then her glance darted to the mouth of the cave, at the other end of which the man she loved was toiling desperately alone in the dark to pierce the dam of earth and stones. It was only a glance, in a second of time, but when she looked up the black-beared man had already made another step downwards. Baraka measured the distance. If he spoke loud now she could understand him. She knew him well, and she knew why he had come, with his long gun. He was her father's brother's son, to whom she was betrothed; he was Saad, and he was risking his life to come down and kill her and the man whom she had led to the ruby mines for love's sake.

He would come down till he was within easy range, and then he would wait till he had a fair chance at them, when they were standing still, and she knew that he was a dead shot. The traveler's revolver could never carry as far as the long gun, Baraka was sure, and Saad could come quite near with safety, since he seemed able to climb down the face of a flat rock where there was not foothold for a cat. He was still descending, he was getting very near; if the traveler were not warned he might come out of the cave unsuspiciously and Saad would shoot him. Saad would wish to shoot him first, because of his revolver, and then he would kill Baraka at his leisure. If he fired at her first the traveler would have a chance at him while he was reloading his old gun. She understood why he had not killed her yet, if indeed he wanted to, for it was barely possible that he loved her enough to take her alive.

MONTCLAIR WOMEN TO TRAIN SERVANTS

Mrs. Edmund B. Osborne, wife of the State chairman of the Progressive League, and other prominent Montclair women, are interested in a movement to solve the servant girl problem which was started at a meeting held in the parlors of the First Methodist church at Montclair Wednesday.

The plan proposed is to provide better servants by establishing training and cooking schools in the cities of the State where girls will be taught every branch of housework, and the organizing of classes for practical instruction to housewives. Mrs. Mary B. Gray, of Newark, was the chief speaker at Wednesday's meeting. It is expected that the opening of the training institutions will introduce the employer and employe upon a common sense basis, and enable them to co-operate intelligently. Under the system that will be proposed at the meeting, servants will be classified and upon graduation will receive diplomas that will define their qualifications.

N. Y. AMUSEMENTS.

The mere announcement that John Mason was to appear in another play by Augustus Thomas was enough to assure a noteworthy production, but no provision could have foreseen such a masterly success as that scored by Mr. Mason in Augustus Thomas new play, "As a Man Thinks," now in its second week at the Thirty-ninth street Theatre under the management of the Messrs. Shubert. The play deals with the social difficulties arising from close relationships between Hebrews and Gentiles, not in the superficial way in which this subject has been approached before, but in the study of essential and fundamental characteristics.

Maude Adams' "Chantecler" has caught the public's fancy as no other piece has done since "Peter Pan." Those who have seen the magnificent production at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York, have found more in this charming woman's itherpretation of Rostand's barnyard drama than the strange beauty of scene, the exquisite poetry of its lines, and the whimsical humor of speaking birds and animals that excited the wonder of all Europe. They have discovered that Miss Adams, with her rare personality, and broad sympathies has breathed into the remarkable play a great message and one of peculiar significance to every American man and woman. It is the message of work—that no matter what the discouragements may be, man's greatest joy in life lies in his complete belief in and faithfulness to his chosen work. No other character that Miss Adams has ever acted has afforded her as large and effective an opportunity of sending her audiences home with a newer, fresher, nobler outlook on life.

TO PROTECT THE COLLAR.

One of the torments of winter is the soiled collar that results from wearing a coat on top of a light waist. Not even a white lining entirely overcomes the difficulty, and various methods are resorted to for protection.

There are shaped bands of pique, white and ecru, that can be bought to button-inside the coat collar. The chief objection is in sewing the buttons so it will fit exactly.

Pique banding in bias folds is also sold by the piece. This is basted inside the coat collar, so it just shows a line of white on the right side.

Some girls wear a band of black ribbon around base of collar of blouse. The coat rests on this and protects the dress from soiling. The ends are crossed in front and fastened at each side with small cuff pins.

The newest of all are the gay stoles. These are made in straight bands of flowered satins in rich all-over effects. Use five-inch ribbon and turn over edges on a lining of white satin.

Make the stole a half yard and finish the ends with black silk knotted fringe three and a half inches deep.

Worn inside the coat these stoles are a protection to delicate frocks, and if artistic silk is chosen they add a smart touch under dark furs.

SOLILOQUIES OF A BENEDICT.

Strange why a woman likes to hear her maid gossip about the neighbors.

Some fellows do not realize they should be ambitious to live up to the best in them.

The man who yields to small things will never overcome life's serious difficulties.

Loving and lovable are traits every person should cultivate.

It takes a mighty brave man to be brave in the face of a dissatisfied wife.

A Scare for the Wolf.

"Do you think I could keep the wolf from the door by my singing?" asked the musical young man.

"You could," replied Miss Cayenne, "if the wolf had any sort of an ear for music."—Washington Star.

TRAINING OF BOYS

Minister's Talk on "Right Kind of a Boy" Fourth in Series.

"OBEDIENCE" THE THEME.

Yesterday afternoon, in Y. M. C. A. Hall Rev. Franklin K. Mathiews delivered the fourth in a series of five talks to mothers of boys on "Obedience." Mr. Mathiews' topic was "The Right Kind of Boy, or Teaching Obedience by Means of the Things That Boys Enjoy." That the interest in the movement for the moral and religious training of boys in the home, of which these lectures are a feature, is well sustained was evidenced by a large audience of mothers and teachers.

Quoting Stevenson's lines: "The world is so full of a number of things, we all should be as happy as kings," Mr. Mathiews said that in these words Stevenson declares the faith of childhood and youth, for the right kind of a boy is fond"of a number of things.' He delights in all things out of doors. He has a fondness for making things. He has a passion for play. All these facts have great significance for moral education. Both in forming and in re-forming the boy's character, we cannot afford to overlook nature's instinct implanted in the boy, which manifests itself in an enthusiasm for play. A concrete expression of the value of this truth for moral education is to be found, on the one hand in the "Boy Scout Movement," and on the other in such an institute as "Boyville" at Cleveland, where, through nature's help, the delinquent boy is reclaimed.

"The boy's love for making things is the instinct of construction asserting itself. In the public schools large use of this is made in manual training which develops the boy both mentally and morally. In our reformatories, we are now mending morals by teaching the boys trades.

"The boy's passion for play is also one of nature's impulses for character building. The public playground, which is saving thousands of children from lives of crime, is a sufficient illustration of this truth.

"But our problem is the difficulty of training the boy morally in the home by means of the things that he enjoys. Here prejudice, too, often stands in the way. Play and piety, for instance, are, for us, divided by a great gulf and we are so apt to be satisfied in thinking that we have trained the boy morally when we have taught him the precept. Then too, our point of view is so far removed from that of the boy. Our purpose is to have the boy stand up straight while his ambition manifests itself in his desire to stand upon his head. But we must overcome our prejudices and follow nature's leading. Nature sets up her school for training in ethics by means of the things boys enjoy. It is for the educator, both parent and teacher, to train themselves so that they may efficiently occupy the place of instructor in this school. We must stand in nature and see to it that every bush is a burning bush in which there is a message from God.

ANOTHER TARDY WITNESS IS SCORED BY THE COURT.

Judge DeMeza had occasion to rebuke another tardy witness in the city court this morning. Mrs. Mary Jane Ransome, colored, of West Third street, had made a complaint against Helen and James Hannis, two colored children next door neighbors. She came into court at about 9:30, after the case had been called. After lecturing the woman, Judge DeMeza heard the case and dismissed the complaint as it was shown that both parties to the trouble were equally at fault.

According to a communication from the school authorities addressed to Judge DeMeza, there has been much trouble among the colored pupils of the Washington school and it is said that the feuds among the youngsters is becoming annoying to the adult population of both colors in the neighborhood of the school.

Judge DeMeza has instructed the neighbors to report any future disturbances and he will see to it that the disturbers are given a chance to explain.

Fined for Drunkenness.

James Frazee, of the West End, who has been arrested several times for intoxication, was fined $5 this morning by Judge DeMeza for the same old offense. Frazee tripped Patrolman McCarthy while the latter was conveying the man to headquarters yesterday afternoon.

The Human Funnel.

Toney Marey, an Italian employed at the pumping station, celebrated his birthday yesterday and incidentally tried to drink a keg of beer, so it was said. He failed to finish the keg, but got drunk. He was fined $3 this morning by City Judge William G. DeMeza.

FIRE HORSES UNFIT

Councilmanic Committee is Blamed for Condition at No. 4 Fire House.

NO REAL PROTECTION GIVEN.

The purchase of a suitable team of horses for fire-house No. 4, in the Netherwood section, has been an expensive proposition for the city. At the present time the team now on duty there, secured only this week from Fisk, Dorr & Carroll, of New York, is not fit for service. One horse about 16 hands, is very ill with distemper and was in that condition when received. The other one is 15½ hands. It has a splint on its right fore leg. The one does not match the other horse. Both are western bred and are not acclimated and it is more than doubtful that they will be suited for the work even if they do become conditioned in this respect.

Thus far the Councilmanic fire committee has had three pairs of horses at this fire house. The price of the first two teams was $700 each and that of the one now at the house is $650. Although the city has actually paid no money for these horses, the city has been under the expense of caring for and feeding them, a considerable item. The committee has come in for a good deal of criticism in the situation, for the reason that while there is an apparatus at the fire-house, no adequate means of taking it to a fire have been provided and no real protection has been afforded the Netherwood section by that house. The territory is an important one, many handsome homes being located there, and the residents believe that they are entitled to better protection.

It is said that a week ago while the apparatus was going to a fire at George street and Leland avenue, it got stuck in the mud and the steamer team had to be summoned to overcome the difficulty. No attempt was made to go to the Otto Arens fire because the horses were in no condition to climb the hill. Last night the firemen were up all night doctoring the new team. In the opinion of those interested the policy of the committee is not only an expensive one, but one that proves serious in case of a big fire.

A.B. COLE'S LECTURE ON WIRELESS TO BOYS

An instructive entertainment was provided for the members of the Wireless Association in Y.M.C.A. hall last evening, by A. B. Cole, of New York, explained the workings of wireless apparatus with the instruments in plain view on tables on the stage. It was expected that Mayor George W. V. Moy would be present to address the members, but his honor was unavoidably detained at home.

Mr. Cole's address was illustrated with blackboard drawings made to explain the various working parts of the aparatus. The blackboard illustrations served to make plain the difficulties under which boys labor who are not entirely familiar with the subject. Special instruments, some of which to lay men are too complicated to be understood, were explained—the way to make them and then how to get the best results in actual use.

Many of the boys had provided themselves with pads and pencils and took notes on the speaker's practical illustrations.

Mr. Cole declared that there are over 200 wireless associations scattered throughout the country and that it ought to be the aim of the local association to bring them all in under one big organization. He exhorted the boys to be strictly honest in their air workings as not to bring opprobrium upon the profession.

After the lecture the boys sat down to a repast which they heartily enjoyed. Mrs. Charles G. August and Mrs. Donald McInnes assisted the members in preparing the feast and were given a vote of thanks. There were thirty-eight boys present and they expressed themselves as greatly pleased with the evening's entertainment. President Wootton introduced Mr. Cole and conducted the business meeting which preceded the lecture.

Secretary August was authorized to purchase a seal for the association and to visit the other wireless associations in the State of Pennsylvania. It is hoped that by getting personally in touch with officers of the other associations to eventually effect a strong and efficient working organization.

Purchased 1911 E-M-F.

Mr. R. W. Osland, of East Front street, has just received his new E-M-F pony tonneau car.

HIGH ENDORSEMENT GIVEN "THE WOLF"

A Canadian story of the Hudson Bay company's country, Eugene Walter's wildfire play "The Wolf," is the offering at the Plainfield theatre tonight. Here is the opinion of I. C. Mishler, of the Mishler Theatre, Altoona:

"The production is complete in every particular and the acting company is perfect. I had the pleasure of seeing the original production in New York, and I can say that I enjoyed the performance here fully as much and when I say that the large audience was delighted with "The Wolf," I simply state the facts."

REV. C.C. CAIN TO SUCCEED REV. SHOOP

Rev. C. C. Cain, who is now pastor of the M. E. church, at Oxford, has been given a call to Grace M. E. church, the borough, to succeed Rev. Ora J. Shoop, who is now finishing his second year here. Mr. Shoop will preach at the borough church tomorrow for the last time as pastor before conference, and on conference Sunday, a week from tomorrow, the pulpit will be occupied by a supply, according to the usual custom.

Mr. Cain, who is about thirty years of age, it is said, has been doing excellent work since joining the conference and druing the past year has been successful in his work at Oxford. He is married. Mr. Cain, it is expected, will accept the call and be transferred by the Bishop.

Mr. Shoop has received a call to the Mount Washington M. E. church, of Pittsburg, Pa., expects to be transferred from the Newark Conference to the Pittsburg Conference. The church to which he has been called is said to be a large and influential one.

Rev. Dr. C. M. Anderson expects to return to the First M. E. church next year, a unanimous call having been extended to him, and it being the pastor's desire to continue here another year. Rev. C. S. Kemble, of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church, also expects to return next year, according to the call of his people and his own wishes.

NOTED HOLEL MAN DIES IN SO. ORANGE

Lloyd B. Nelson, who for nearly forty-five years conducted the Hotel Nelson at New Market, died at 3 o'clock this morning at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Charles Smalley, of South Orange. He had been ailing for nearly eight months from paralysis and the infirmities of age. For the past six weeks he had been confined to his bed and the end was not unexpected.

Mr. Nelson was the son of Abram Nelson and was born at Scotch Plains seventy-six years ago. The father conducted a hotel business there and later moved to New Market and established the old hostelry in the village that is still maintained by Chas. Ahearn. It is one of the best known stands in this part of the State. At the death of Abram Nelson, over forty-five years ago, his son, Lloyd succeeded him in the proprietorship. He remained in charge until 1899, when he leased the business to John Dent, now steward at the Elks' club, and went to South Orange to live with his daughter. He afterward sold the New Market hotel property to William B. Smith, one of the Fair heirs, and it is now owned by the latter's brother-in-law, Charles Thornton.

Besides Mrs. Smalley, Mr. Nelson is survived by his wife, who was Miss Eva Williams, of Millington, and two other daughters, Mrs. Charles S. Day, of New Market, and Mrs. Eva Weston, of New York; also four sons, Abram, of Somerville; Fred, of New York, formerly of Newark; Frank, of Roselle Park, and Herbert, of Phoebus, Va.

LOWRIE MEMORIAL

Bronze Tablet as Tribute to Author of Famous Gospel Hymns.

AT PARK AVE. BAPTIST CHURCH.

There will be unveiled at the Park Avenue Baptist church in the near future, a bronze memorial tablet to Rev. Dr. Robert Lowrie, who for many years ministered to the spiritual wants of the members of the church and this without a monetary remuneration. Dr. Lowrie is remembered for his sterling sturdiness of purpose of preaching the Gospel and chiefly for the authorship of three immortal hymns.

Among the compositions which have a world-wide acceptance and of which Dr. Lowrie was the author are: "Shall We Gather at The River," "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight" and "I Need Thee Every Hour." These hymns are sung in Christian churches the world over and their popularity seems to grow rather than to diminish with use.

It has been related that "Where is My Wandering Boy,' has caused more prodigals to return than any other exhortation, musical or written, than is known today among the missioners of the militant churches.

The tablet will bear at its apex a crown, with the four sides garnitured with laurel wreaths. In the center is a bas relief likeness of Dr. Lowrie and at the lower right hand corner are to be seen replicas of the original manuscript of the three hymns mentioned.

The mould for the casting which will be made in Jersey City, is after the plaster cast designed and made by Mr. De Festetics, of the Craftsmens Art Company, of which Judge William N. Runyon is president, and is said to be a work of the highest class.

DUNELLENITES SEE "DISTRICT SCHOOL"

The difficulty of conducting educational matters in the rural sections was portrayed by the Young People's Society of the Dunellen Presbyterian church, last night. It was in the form of a play in three scenes entitled "The District School of Blueberry Corners." It was presented in the chapel before and audience that accupied every available bit of space. The plot of the piece dealt with the resignation of the teacher of the Blueberry school and the efforts of the selectmen to secure another one. There were several applicants,, men and women, all of whom were considered. The place was finally given to a male aspirant, played by Ben Dodwell, much to the disgust of the young women seeking the position. The final scene showed the young teacher trying to maintain a semblance of order in the school and teach at the same time. It afforded an opportunity for lots of fun-making and the members of the cast made the most of every bit of it. The audience enjoyed the play immensely as was shown by the generous applause.

The scenes were interspersed by enjoyable musical numbers given by Miss Alice Frescoln and Miss Haefner, mandoline, and Miss Julia Heafner, piano. The combination was very pleasing and the young women were heartily encored.

Those taking part in the play were the following:

School committee, Lewis Churchill, R. Hamley and Fred Fedderman; applicants, Miss Eva Schneider, Miss Emma Voorhees, Miss Eleanor Dodwill and Benjamin Dodwell; pupils, the Misses Nellie Vail, Irma Baldwin, D. Cameron, Bessie Morris, Ruth Voorhees, E. Schneider, Pearl Dodwell, May Day, Laura Todd and Emma Voorhees; R. B. Pennock, Benjamin A. Cole, Alfred Day, George Martin, Edgar Starker, Benjamin Vail, George F. Apgar, Clarence T. Voorhees and Walter Law; visitors, Miss Meta Pennock, Miss E. Dodwell, Mrs. Frederick and Miss Jessie Frescoln.

The entertainment was arranged and conducted by Miss Ella Boice and Mrs. J. Newton Apgar, who deserve great credit for its success. It was a decided financial success as well as social. The proceeds will be added to the society's treasurer.

The audience was seated by four young women who acted as ushers. They were Miss Nora Bird, Miss Jeannette Neighbor, Miss Lizzie Reusch and Miss Sutton.

MR. TOLLES UNDERGOES OPERATION ON FOOT

President Ralph I. Tolles, of the Common Council, underwent on operation at his home on Westervelt avenue, yesterday, for the removal of a small portion of an injured shin bone, the result of his accident a few weeks ago while trying to board a train at the North Avenue Station. As Mr. Tolles was trying to put his foot up on the step of the car, it slipped and he fell with considerable force, injuring his right leg and sustaining a severe shock.

Although Mr. Tolles has been out a few times since the accident, the leg gave him much trouble and following an examination it was decided to have a part of the injured bone removed. This was done yesterday by Dr. B. VanD. Hedges and the operation was a success. It is expected that Mr. Tolles will be able to leave his home within a short time.

EMINENT PRELATE TO PREACH AT GRACE

The Right Rev. Arthur S. Lloyd, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Virginia and president of the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States, will be the special preacher at Grace church tomorrow, both morning and afternoon. He is probably one of the best known prelates in the United States, and one whose career has been marked by an enthusiastic devotion to the spread of Christ's kingdom throughout the the world. On several occasions he had been elected the bishop of various dioceses throughout the country and has many times declined that honor, feeling that his work lay in a less conspicuous quarter, but perhaps even in one which provided a much wider opportunity.

In 1909 Dr. Lloyd was elected to the Diocese of Virginia, and true to the tradition that when Virginia calls her sons invariably respond, he accepted the election and was consecrated the coadjutor. After the General convention held at Cincinnati last fall when the Board of Misions was reorganized, Dr. Lloyd again found himself at the head of the missionary work of the country when he was elected presiding officer of the Board.

GIRLS' BASKETBALL TEAM CELEBRATES

After winning their game in the basketball series yesterday the victory was duly celebrated by the lacol High School girls at a party given at the home of Miss Jessie Stewart, of South avenue, last night. The boys' basketball team and a few other invited guests helped to celebrate.

The rooms were attractively decorated for the occasion and a pleasant evening was passed in dancing and games. The event marked the closing of a successful season for both teams. Among those present were Misses Jessie Stewart, Ruth Wean, Ruth Douglas, Reva Waldorf, Madeline Durar, Pauline Gates, Margaret Russell, Thyra Stiles, Margaret Hutchinson, Carolyn Slawson, Esther Phillips, Margery Biddleman and Madeline Moy, and Messrs, Alfred Manley, William Coyle, Donald Webb, Jack Ricketts, Huston Durar, Ernest VanZandt, Gardner Bristol, Sidney Karr, Sewell Ulrich, Jack Zerega, Fred Krom Edson Woodhull, Gordon Moy and Frank Clarke.

LEVINE'S HOBBY GETS HIM A BIG BLACK EYE.

Harry Levine's passion for following the fire apparatus every time an alarm is sounded got him into trouble yesterday with one of his fellow employees in a cleaning establishment on West Second street. Arthur E. Groff, the other employee handed Mr. Levine a black eye for daring to call him a liar. Each man was fined $5, which was paid.

The trouble started over the cleaning of a pair of trousers which was wanted on time. An alarm sounded from box 12 and, so it is said, Levine dropped his work and hustled out to try and get a ride on the chemical engine. Because he lost the time running to what proved to be a false alarm the trousers were not finished in time. Groff upbraided Levine and immediately there was a scrap including the passing of the lie.

MISSIONARIES STIR AUDIENCES

Work in China, India and Philippines Told Impressively to Women.

AT BIG UNION MEETINGS

In preparation for the fiftieth enniversary celebration of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society, which is to take place in New York, beginning on Monday, Trinity Reformed church was crowded yesterday afternoon and evening with women interested in the movement. Trinity's choir loft was filled with a chorus of young women whose voices rang out in praise and jubilation. The choir was composed of Misses Mabel L. Stutsman, Edna A. Groff, R. G. Van Vliet, Elizabeth Nash, Caroline Demlar, Anna S. Lee, Irene B. Sawyer, Martha E. Camp, Marguerite S. Phillips, Marjorie Brown, Ruth G. Maguire, Edith D. Whitney, Marion Mortimer, Sue Farland, Cora Gano, Jeanette Neal, Jessica Hill, Evelyn Manley and Emma Ryno. Miss Alice Carroll was at the organ.

Mrs. James R. Joy presided at the afternoon session and Mrs. Frederick G. Mead in the evening. Two addresses were given at the first session, one by Mrs. Helen M. Montgomery, president of the Long Island Women's Missionary Society and the other by Dr. Mary Carlton, whose station is in China. Both addresses were interesting and held the closest attention of an audience which nearly filled the church. After the addresses a plea was made for funds and a large subscription list was made up but as neither the afternoon or evening lists are complete no figures can be given as to the total amount.

Mrs. Montgomery gave an historical review of foreign missions from their inception in 1811 when $200 was sent to China, until the present day when it is no unusual thing for $1,000,000 to be raised for the purpose. Dr Carlton's address contained much information anent the conditions in the large field in China.

Inthe evening another large audience paid attention to the utterances of two missionaries. Mrs. Mead explained the purpose of the coming jubilee and urged all those present to do their utmost to help the good work along. She then introduced Dr. Lewis R. Scudder, of the Arcot mission, Madras, India.

Dr. Scudder laid stress on the magnitude of the work to be done in the great country where there are millions who have never heard the name Christ. He compared the mission field in which he is working, a territory of 9,000 square miles, with a population of 2½ million of people, to the State of New Jersey, giving figures which appalled the audience.

Dr. Scudder told how greatly he was hampered in his work by lack of funds to use for hospital purposes and the need for instruments and other equipments. He urged those who had the opportunity to give with a free hand for this great work.

Miss Suman, of Copez, Panay, one of the Philippine Islands, was the second speaker and told most amusingly of her work in the children's orphanage there. She said that everyone is agreed that the Filipino is lazy, but a closer observation explains this apparent laziness as merely a lack of incentive for work, and that when an object and inducement are laid before them they are as the rest of the world.

Miss Suman told of the unreadiness of the Filipinos for self-government in spite of their desire for it. The American schools and missions are doing great work in rooting out the character which has been theirs for centuries. To inculcate habits of truth and honesty in her orphanage has been one of the hardest of struggles and to teach them to be clean and orderly in their clothing was an unusual task. But the difference in them is already apparent.

Several delightful selections were rendered by Trinity's quartet choir and at the close of the meeting a collection and pledges were taken.

The jubilee which will begin on Monday in New York and continue until and including Thursday next promises to be one of the greatest efforts ever made to raise funds for prosecuting the work among foreign nations. There are several places of meeting and yesterday Mrs. Joy urged every woman who could possibly do so to attend at least one one day of the four. The first big meeting occurs in the Metropolitan Opera House on Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock and will be held under the BODY OF MISSING MAN FOUND STUCK IN MUD.

Elizabeth, March 25.—Missing since the night of March 7, the body of John O'Donnell, for many years an employe of the Elizabeth Street Department, was found late Thursday afternoon stuck in the mud at the bottom of the Pountney Creek in the Newark-Elizabeth meadows. The man was last seen alive about 11:30 p. m., March 7, near the Singer Sewing Machine Works, when he accosted a friend. Since his disappearance searching parties hunted for traces of him more than a week.

Michael O'Leary and John Myers, assistants to Health Inspector Richards went to the meadows Thursday to make a survey for digging mosquito trenches, when they saw something in the bed of the creek. A closer examination showed it to be a body and they dragged it ashore.

The victim was sixty-nine years old, born in Ireland, and came to Elizabethport twenty-five years ago. He was a widower and boarded with his daughter, Mrs. Bridget Regan, at Broadway and Park place.

The funeral will take place Monday morning from St. Patrick's church.

SHIRLEY & JOHNSTON
BABCOCK BUILDING

AFFIRMS $280 JUDGMENT AGAINST FATHER KELLY.

Trenton, March 25.—The Supreme Court has affirmed a judgment for $280, recovered in the Warren Circuit by the Fitsgerald-Spear Company against Father Peter J. Kelly, rector of St. Rose's church, at Oxford Furnace. A written agreement was made between the church and a contractor, named Lennon, for the building of a rectory for the use of the church corporation, as a home for its rector.

Lennon obtained a quantity of lumber from the Fitsgerald-Spear Company, but failed to pay for it. The company refused to supply any more lumber until it had received something on account. Thereupon Father Kelly promised to pay the entire lumber bill if the company would furnish materials required for the completion of Lennon's contract. This offer was accepted and the material was delivered.

Chief Justice Gummere, in a memorandum for the court, said the principal question presented was whether the promise sued on was a promise by Father Kelly to pay the debt of Lennon. If it was, he said, admittedly the defendant could not be held, as the promise was not in writing. The court held, however, that the promise was, in fact, an original engagement by Father Kelly to pay his own debt, and, therefore, recovery against him was properly permitted. The court regarded as without weight a contention that Father Kelly was a mere agent of the church. The chief justice said that as Father Kelly had made no attempt to bind the church the obligation which he had assumed was purely a personal one.

BILL FOR APPRENTICES AFFECTS LABOR UNIONS.

If the legislators can be induced to take the action, a bill to prohibit labor unions from limiting the number of apprentices in the various trades will soon be introduced in the New Jersey Legislature. Those back of the proposed legislation assert that petitions asking support for the bill are being liberally signed by employers in Newark, the Oranges and Montclair.

The projected bill contains the following provision:

"It shall be unlawful for any person, persons, combination of persons, or body of persons, to combine to prevent any apprentices or persons about to become or endeavoring to become apprenticed, from learning useful trades, or restricting the number thereof who can learn such trades, or in any way interfering with their employment as such apprentices."

There appeared a day or two ago in the Columbia Spectator, a publication issued at Columbia University, New York, a synopsis of the proposed bill. The writer of the article expressed the hope that John D. Prince, who is a professor of languages on the Columbia faculty, and who represents Passaic county in the New Jersey Legislature, would support the measure. The publication of Senator Prince's name in connection with the article has created a belief in some circles that he intended to work for the passage of the act.

When asked yesterday if it was true that he intended to give the bill his support, Senator Prince said that he knew nothing whatever about the matter except what had appeared in the Columbia Spectator.

"The measure is one of such widespread importance," he said, "that I shall certainly have nothing to do with it until I have had an opportunity to examine it in all its bearings."

N. Y. AMUSEMENTS.

Dorothy Shoemaker, who plays the ingenue role of Fanny Owens, in David Belasco's production of "Nobody's Widow," in which Blanche Bates stars at the Hudson theatre this season, is a recent stage recruit from the ranks of society. Miss Shoemaker is the youngest daughter of Captain Commander C. F. Shoemaker, of the revenue cutter service. After gaining some experience, she applied to Mr. Belasco while he was there last winter superintending the production of "The Lily." Impressed by the young lady's talent, Mr. Belasco promised to give her a chance, and when he was casting "Nobody's Widow" last fall, he sent for her to fill the role of Fanny Owens, in which she has since been unusually successful.

In "Excuse Me," Rupert Hughes' farcical romance, at the Gaiety theatre, Henry W. Savage has added another big winner to his long list of successes. The farce is in three acts and aptly described as a Pullman carnival running at a mile-a-minute pace on a clear track of fun. The scenes are all laid in the interior of a vestibuled Pullman train running from Chicago to San Francisco. The first and third acts show the interior of an elaborately appointed practical sleeping car, while the second act takes place in a combination drawing room-smoker on the same train.

TAKE CARE OF THE TREES.

Trenton, March 25.—Trees most suitable for street planting were discussed at the meeting of the New Jersey Federation of Shade Tree Commissions yesterday afternoon. Professor John B. Smith, State entomologist, in talking on the spraying of trees, directed attention particularly to elm trees whose leaves are destroyed by what are known as elm leaf beetles.

In his address President Charles G. Titsworth told of the work of the federation. He said it was not organized for mercenary means nor did it seek any political power.

"The Shade Tree Federation seeks to restore trees," said Mr. Titsworth. "By encouraging the cultivation of trees, we shall inculcate a love of nature and of Nature's God. We shall induce out-of-door living and so make life simpler, more beautiful and happier in our generation. To carry out our aim we shall need to educate ourselves and our fellow citizens and to extend a welcome to all who are with us in spirit. We shall need to fight the enemies of the trees, those which have two legs, those which have four legs and those whose legs may be counted by the dozens."

SPORTS
News and Notes

GOLF.

Rumor has it that this year's tri-city match for the Lesley cup in all probability will be held the last week in September. As it is New York's turn to handle this attraction it means that another important event will be crowded into an always popular month with golfers. The schedule already calls for the inter-collegiate tournament at Baltusrol, September 5 to 9; the national amateur at Apawamis, September 11 to 16, and the seventh annual seniors' tournament also at Apawamis, September 27 and 28.

As the tri-city requires only two days to run off, it would be possible to hold this competition immediately following the seniors'. Just where the inter-city will be decided seems largely a matter of conjecture at present. When in this district it generally takes place at Garden City. There are many other good courses however, so that it may be found advisable to select some hitherto untried green. The territory of the Metropolitan Golf Association embraces all of Long Island, consequently the national course near Shinnecock Hills would be eligible. In this way the cream of the Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and metropolitan amateurs would have a chance to try out the "ideal" links.

Ability to play golf well seems to run in the Hyde family, of Brooklyn. Only a short time ago Miss Lillian B. Hyde, the metropolitan title holder, won the Florida women's championship at Palm Beach, defeating her sister in the final round. A week later James R. Hyde, a brother of Lillian, won the men's title of Florida. Although somewhat outnumbered by the Fownes family, it is safe to say that the Hydes, of Brooklyn, are running a close second to the Pittsburg clan.

COUNTY AUTHORITIES AND POLICE CLASH.

Elizabeth, March 25.—Attenia Pasquaili, of Brooklyn, after being discharged Thursday morning in the Elizabeth police court for carrying a concealed weapon, was arrested last evening at the Elizabethport station by Deputy Sheriffs Carey and Buckley. This morning he was committed to the county jail by Judge Keller in default of $300 bail.

This is the outcome of a clash between Prosecutor Swift and Sheriff Kirkland on one hand and the police authorities of Elizabeth on the other. The prisoner, it is alleged, drew a loaded revolver in a saloon in Peterstown Wednesday evening and threatened to shoot another man. Buckley, who was in the place, put him under arrest. Then Pasquaili turned the weapon on Buckley, but Frank Scutro grabbed the gun and took it away from the Brooklynite, who was then locked up. The case was called Thursday in Elizabeth police court, and Judge Mahon dismissed it.

When the sheriff and prosecutor heard of this action the prosecutor ordered Judge Kelly to issue a warrant for Pasquaili's arrest.

PENNSY DENIES JERSEY CITY TERMINAL STORY.

Philadelphia, March 25.—Samuel Rea, first vice-president of the Pennsylvania Railroad in a dictated statement yesterday, said that the report that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company would sell its Jersey City terminal "is without foundation." He continued:

"It is true that the Pennsylvania's principal passenger station is now in the heart of New York city, and that with the inauguration of joint service with the Hudson company between Park place, Newark, and the Manhattan Transfer and the Hudson terminal at Church and Cortlandt streets, New York city, few passenger trains, in addition to express and mail trains, need run to the Jersey City terminal.

"It is one of the most valuable railroad terminals on the New York Harbor, and its continued use for railroad purposes is assured. The Lehigh Valley and the Erie now use it—the former for all and the latter for part of its passenger service—and will continue to use it until other arrangements are made."

The Brakeman Telephones

"DON'T keep supper waiting. I don't know when I will get home."

When the wife of the brakeman on the railroad hears his cheery voice over the telephone, she doesn't worry—she knows he is all right.

His is a hazardous occupation. His absence would cause her uneasiness.

That's where the Bell Telephone in the home saves many anxious moments.

It's worth a great deal in times like that to have the local and long distance service of the Bell Telephone System.

STATE NEWS BRIEFS

While playing basketball Wednesday night Howard Bomhoff, a young bookkeeper, of Millville, fell upon his arm and fractured it at the elbow.

A Westville man dug up his entire garden hunting for a fountain pen which he thought he had lost while setting out flowers. Later he found the pen in the "wrong pocket."

Mrs. Jeanette Martin, of Mt. Holly, has been notified by the Court of Chancery that she has been granted a divorce from Thomas Martin upon statutory grounds.

Judge Cole is to start an innovation in the Salem County Circuit Court by charging all Supreme and Circuit Court cases at the opening of the term instead of having them postponed until a month later.

Out of State prison on parole, Jesse Morris Thursday, in the Camden Police Court, pleaded guilty to the theft of jewelry valued at $10 from the residence of G. H. Armstrong, 616 Carman street, where he was assisting in plastering work. He was committed in default of bail.

A. P. Rice, of Philadelphia, bought the Hotel Flanders on St. James place, Atlantic City, for $21,000. J. N. Kline Thursday bought of the owner, William Staiger, the Sea Crest, on the same avenue, for $22,000.

Miss Mary Gardiner, of Collingswood, N. J., was attacked by a white man at Knight's Park Thursday night while on her way home. She was knocked down and her purse, containing a small sum of money, taken from her. The man escaped.

The mysterious disappearance of Joseph E. Meister, Jr., of 9 Howell street, Trenton, who has been missing from home since last Saturday, continues to baffle the police. Meister, who is twenty-eight years old, left his home last Saturday night, after telling his parents that he was going on his way to visit a friend on South Clinton avenue.

Howard Rumsey narrowly escaped death in a fall from a wagon at May's Landing. Three teams were carting timber to the railroad and on their return were racing to get first place for loading. When the second wagon struck a rough place in the road Rumsey and two helpers tumbled off, the wheels passing over Rumsey, breaking his leg, and the next wagon and horses just escaping dashing over him as he lay unconscious. The two laborers fell under the wheels, which passed over their bodies, inflicting only small bruises.

Representatives of the People's Water Company have stated to the committee of Millville City Council that they will sell the plant to the city for $180,000. Water Commissioners fixed the price at $222,500 some time ago and City Council turned it down at that price. The plant was assessed last year at $140,000, and from this amount the company appealed to the County Tax Board. The matter will be discussed at the next meeting of the Council. With the matter of unpaved streets, faulty sewers and a half dozen costly suits pending in the courts, Millville is not likely to buy the plant.

PICK JERSEY OFFICERS FOR TEXAS WAR GAME.

Trenton, March 25.—Pursuant to a circular sent out by the War Department inviting militia officers to attend the maneuvers in Texas, Adjutant General Wilbur F. Sadler, Jr., has authorized a number of officers of the New Jersey guard to report for duty in Texas on April 5, to remain in service for a period of fourteen days. The maneuvers of the regular troops will supply a school of instruction and observation for officers from all the States, and may mean that there will be no officers' schools at the various military posts this year.

The order made by General Sadler assigns the officers to report at San Antonio, Tex., and to report to the commanding general on or before April 5.

The time will be fourteen days exclusive of the time going to and coming from the camp.

During the time the officers are on duty they will receive the pay of their rank. They will take full field equipment with the exception of tentage, and will take their horse equipment. Horses will be supplied by the government. Upon their return home the officers will make reports of their observations to the adjutant-general.

There were no officers from the Second or Fifth regiments picked because there will be elections for colonels in both these regiments in the near future.

The officers who have been authorized to go are Major Winfield S. Price, Third Regiment; Major Arthur H. MacKie, First Regiment; Captain John O. Van Slyke, regimental adjutant, Fourth Regiment; Captain John J. Fearon, commandant Company C, Third Regiment; Second Lieutenant William A. Baker, Company C, Fourth Regiment; First Lieutenant C. Harold Norbury, Company M, First Regiment; First Lieutenant Frederick A. Reimer, Battery A; Captain Carrol H. Francis, Medical Corps, assigned to Third Regiment.

Benjamin D. Greene, released from prison in Atlanta after serving three years for Savannah Harbor frauds, returned to New York.

auspices of the Y. W. C. A. The Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church will be the scene of activity on Tuesday morning, beginning at 10:30 o'clock. At the headquarters, Room 901, 156 Fifth avenue, detailed program may be obtained.

In an interview with Mrs. Gabriel Reid Maguire, yesterday afternoon, The Daily Press reporter learned that the jubilee is bound to be a success. Mrs. Maguire, more than any other woman in this city, is possessed of actual knowledge of conditions in Africa, a mission field which not by any means the smallest in world.

Mrs. Maguire said, "The primary object of our jubilee in Plainfield was that every woman's eyes and heart should be turned toward the great jubilee in New York next week. I believe the women of Plainfield are looking forward to the coming jubilee with an interest undreamed of.

"I believe that there are hundreds of women answering in their own hearts the call to help along the work and that they will present substantial offerings to confirm their convictions that their help is needed." The members of the general committee which is comprised of Mrs. Maguire, Mrs. J. S. Zelie, Mrs. V. Rapalye, and Mrs. Chickering, will meet this afternoon to look over and arrange the offerings taken yesterday and send them to their respective denominational boards.

Number 3

THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

LIVELY GRASS FIRES KEEP FIREMEN BUSY.

Grass fires in various parts of the city continue to endanger property and keep the fire department busy. Three alarms have been answered since yesterday afternoon and all would have resulted seriously but for prompt action.

The worst fire of the three occurred yesterday afternoon and spread over nearly a block at Central and Stelle avenues and Denison street. Several fences and a couple of small sheds were ignited by the flames and destroyed. The firemen responded to an alarm from box 38 and were compelled to use two lines of hose, the chemical engine and extinguishers to put out the blaze. The loss will reach $100.

A second alarm was turned in at 7:30 last night for a fire in the woods on Belvidere avenue back of the W. Palmer Smith ground. Several men had attempted to beat out the flames, but without success. There was no serious damage.

The third fire occurred at noon today and was on Union street. The grass blazed fiercely and a barn and new residence building were just catching when the firemen arrived. A line of hose removed the danger.

A Family Disagreement.

John Hummel, of the borough, was arraigned before Recorder Dolliver, yesterday, charged by his wife with disorderly conduct. It proved to be a family squabble and the magistrate giving both some wholesome advice, the complaint was dismissed with a warning that a continuance of hostilities would result in severe measures.

SAYS POSTING RACING RESULTS NOT ILLEGAL.

Paterson, March 25.—John J. Donohue, saloon-keeper, of 224 Market street, was given a hearing before Recorder James F. Carroll, Thursday afternoon, on charges of maintaining a disorderly house preferred by Chief of Police John Bimson, following a raid on the saloon on the evening of March 8 last. At that time Donohue and forty patrons of his saloon were arrested. The defendant was represented by Peter McGinnis. Chief Bimson was the only witness. The defense practically admitted that what the chief testified to was true, but declared that the saloon-keeper was not violating any law in posting on blackboard the results of racing on the Jacksonville and Tampa, Fla, tracks.

The recorder held that sufficient evidence was adduced to submit the case to the grand jury and Mr. Donohue was held in $500 bail.

Mr. McGinnis quoted the law on the subject of gambling and added that the only clause in the section which his client was charged with violating was that relating to "advertising." He declared that his client had not violated the law because the information he was furnishing his patrons was the same as appeared in most newspapers and could not be construed as advertising because the information was given after the events were held and therefore of no use as advertising matter. He declared further that if his client were guilty of any such charge, every newspaper printing such matter would be equally liable.

Recorder Carroll said that he could not pass on the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but concluded that there was enough evidence adduced to hold Mr. Donohue for the grand jury.

EXHIBIT A. HENS, BOTHERED THE POLICE.

Perth Amboy, March 25.—Held as evidence against Charles Palmer, who admitted in police court Thursday that he stole them, two hens crawled into a narrow space between a steel cell and a brick wall at police headquarters and were only rescued after more than eight hours of hard work. Two heavy cells had to be moved, and there was so little space in the corridor in which to work that the task was a difficult one. Sergeant William McDermott heard the hens squawking and found them fast so far in the narrow space between the cell and the wall that he could not reach them. The rescue work was carried on during the balance of his time on duty, and was successfully completed under the direction of Sergeant James Milligan.

GEISHA BOWS.

In every style there is traceable an influence slightly oriental. It may be due to the realization of the beauties of some eastern styles. I think that the enthusiasm of Paul Poiret, the Paris designers, has been responsible for the prominence that Japanese line and coloring have been given.

On many dresses for afternoon and evening there appear now butterfly bows. By some they are called geisha bows—by all they are judged charming. These are rather large, and are flat and are placed at the back of the gown. They give a comforting thought that there are no gaps at the junction of the bodices.

Any marteial is used by makers to exemplify this idae. Black velvet is good, colored silks are much used and all kinds of metallic tissues and beaded nets can be formed into these decorative ornaments.

For the high line so prominent in dress at present the geisha bow is particularly adapted. It accentuates the short effect, yet preserves a flat effect at the back of a girdle, a feature that some medists are emphasizing.

This Japanese bow can be large or small, and is so easily made that even the woman who declares that she has no "knack" at tying bows can fashion one. At any rate, the flat, broad bow is one more effective decoration for the back of a gown, and combines beauty with novelty.

MAY DEPORT THIS WOMAN.

Paterson, March 25.—Miss Bertha Bergman, according to the authorities of the United States Bureau of Commerce and Labor at Ellis Island, came into the country in violation of the regulations restricting the class of immigrants permitted to enter the country, and Captain of Detectives John Tracy located the young woman at 421 Main street Thursday and placed her under arrest.

The girl was taken before Chief John Bimson and after an examination was locked up in police headquarters. She will be arraigned before the recorder, and officers from Ellis Island will be in attendance. The young woman will probably be turned over to the government inspectors and taken back to Ellis Island for further hearing. She said she was twenty-three years old, was born in Russia, was a dressmaker, and could earn her own living.

In Cleaning Windows.

If a few drops of turpentine are sprinkled on a damp duster when cleaning windows they will be found to dry quickly and cleanly, and can easily be polished with a dry duster. This is a particularly good hint for damp weather.

HAD A HARD SKULL.

The Baseball Catcher Who Was the Original Bonehead.

Ed Ashenback, for many years a manager of minor league teams, in his book, "Humor Among the Minors," claims to be the originator of the expression "bonehead," which is now, with its synonymous terms of "solid ivory," "mahogany bean," "concrete dome" and "cement skull," so common in baseball.

Ashenback says that when he was managing the Shreveport team of the Southern league some years ago he had a catcher who could hit some, but who had the very serious weakness of not being able to gauge a foul ball no matter how easy it was.

One day a batter raised a high foul directly over the plate, and the catcher, misjudging it, was hit squarely on top of the head by the descending sphere, which knocked off his mask and bounded away some thirty feet. That night Ashenback finished his supper early and was passing out of the dining room when he happened to walk behind this catcher, who was devouring his evening meal with gusto and enthusiasm. Stopping at the table, Ed passed his hands over the backstop's head, feeling for the bump which he thought would surely be there on account of the contact with the ball that afternoon. But there was no lump to be felt. "No wonder," said Ash. "How could there be a bump? Your head is solid bone."

FOX HUNTING IN ENGLAND.

It Is More Than a Sport; It Is a Sort of Religion.

In England sport is not only a religion; it is the religion. If a man is a good sportsman he need not be anything else. It may seem hyperbolical to describe fox hunting as a religion and the fox as a deity, but it is a bare, bald exactitude. The true fox hunting sportsman exhibits all the attributes of the devotee, the fanatic, the martyr. He is ready to die for his faith. I am sure he would cheerfully allow himself to be burned alive rather than hunt a bag of aniseed. His friends would cut him dead if they suspected him of treason to the pure ideal of fox hunting. His clubs would refrigerate him. He would be a marked man. He would be a pariah, an outcast, a bounder, an outsider.

The power of the caste of fox hunters is as formidable as the power of the various Indian castes. It is a mightier engine than the law, for it is driven by public opinion. The county would ostracize the wretch caught in the act of violating the fox hunting code. His career would be ended. Never more could he hold up his head. He would be a leper. The taint of aniseed would hang about him forever.—James Douglass in London Leader.

The Book Von Moltke Read.

The Chateau de Ferrieres has a historic as well as a proprietorial interest. It was the scene of the memorable interview between Bismarck and Jules Ferry, when the latter made his impassioned declaration about "not a stone of our fortresses, not an inch of our territory." Bismarck was the only speaker on the Prussian side. As far as he was concerned, the colloquy would have been ended in a few minutes. Ferry's special pleading lasted the best part of an hour. It all ended as we know.

Silent in a corner of the room there sat Moltke. Silent he remained all the while. He was reading, and he never took his eyes off his book. Felix Whitehurst was curious to know what book it was that had thus absorbed him. It was "Martin Chuzzlewit."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Artificial Eyes.

The earliest notice of artificial eyes occurs in a very rare work by the French surgeon Ambroise Pare, entitled "La Methode Curative des Playes et Fractures de la Teste Humaine," Paris, 1561. Pare gives a description and figures of artificial eyes to be worn in cases where the eyeball has given way and all the humors have escaped. They are to be segments of a hollow sphere, made of gold, coated with enamel painted in natural colors. With the exception of the gold they are exactly like the eyes in use at the present time, which are made wholly of glass.—London Notes and Queries.

Spartacus.

Spartacus was a Thracian of noble birth. While serving as an officer in an auxiliary corps of the Roman army he deserted, and, being apprehended, he was reduced to slavery and made a gladiator. Escaping, he collected a body of slaves and gladiators, 73 B. C., and ravaged all southern Italy, defeating several Roman forces that were sent against him. He was defeated and slain by Crassus, 71 B. C. His revolt at one time threatened the very existence of the republic.

Serious.

"Mrs. Brown! Mrs. Brown! Come quick! Master George was foolin' with a revolver an' he's shot one of the servants!"

"Is it one of the maids?"

"No, ma'am; it's the cook."

"The cook? Mercy! I can never forgive him, never!" — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Somewhat Different.

"My name," said the great tragedian, "has adorned many billboards."

"And mine," rejoined the low comedian, "has adorned many board bills."—Chicago News.

CENSURED THE CULPRIT.

But the Judge Took Him Into His Private Office to Do It.

"You allege cruelty, madam," says the court. "What particular form of cruelty?"

"Your honor," says the complainant, "my husband got mad and threw things at me because I tried to please him with the meals I fixed for him."

"What have you to say?" asks the judge of the defendant.

"I'll tell you, judge. Maybe I was a little too hasty, but it's this way: She is always trying new salads that she finds in the recipe columns of the papers, and after I had tried to eat nasturtium salad and hickory nut salad and carrot salad and eggplant salad and dried beef salad and spaghetti salad I did lose my temper when she handed a dish of shredded chrysanthemums with olive oil on them."

"I will not grant a divorce, but I will censure the defendant in my private office," says the judge, leading the way. Once the door is closed on him and the wondering defendant the judge says:

"Shake, old man! I did the best I could for you. I have to put up this bluff about censuring you because my own wife will read of the case, and she is now making delicious dessert from cold mush and left over breakfast foods."

Clasping each other's hand, the two men weep silently.—Life.

FUNERAL EFFIGIES.

A Queer Custom That Was Followed In Bygone Days.

At the funerals of great personages, the old chronicles tell us, "his lively effigy," dressed to imitate life, was carried in a chariot before the corpse to the grave, then there set up under a "hearse" or a temporary monument in the church. Such effigies were often left in a glass case standing over the vault where the interment had taken place. Some statues were of wood, with heads of plaster, but the more modern ones were of wax.

In the olden days laudatory poems or epitaphs were affixed with pins or wax to these "hearses" and were even thrown into graves on the coffins in a similar manner to our modern custom of flowers at a burial.

When Skelton, poet laureate to Henry VIII., "took sanctuary at Westminster to escape the displeasures of the then all powerful Cardinal Wolsey it is said that he subsisted on what he earned by writing epitaphs for use at funerals in the abbey.

She Didn't Want Tickets.

There was a number of ticket buyers in the theater lobby. Following the unwritten law, they had formed in line and were being waited upon according to precedence. Suddenly an overdressed woman, ignoring the line, rushed up to the window and tried to engage the attention of the box office man.

The box office man shook his head at her. "Madam," he said, with some emphasis, "you must take your place at the foot of the line."

"Foot of the line?" she repeated. "Nonsense!"

"You will not get any tickets," declared the man, "until all these people in the line have been served."

"Tickets?" replied the woman. "I don't want any tickets. All I want is a dime for a dime. Two nickels will do. Thanks."

And she hastily rustled out.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Conscience.

It was De Quincey who likened conscience to the whispering gallery in St. Paul's, London. A word spoken ever so softly on one side of the vast dome is loudly re-echoed on the other. In youth conscience chid him in sullen whispers; in old age, at the other end of his life gallery, the same conscience spoke to him in peals of thunder. The still small voice which the boy would not hear returned to the old man like the crack of doom in terrible self reproaches. Even Nero, the monster, had to fly from the spot where he had caused his mother to be murdered. He fancied he was haunted by her angry ghost; that he heard the blowing of a ghostly trumpet and wailings over her tomb. What a terrible discoverer of sin conscience is!—Christian Herald.

See Bagdad From Afar.

Like most oriental cities, Bagdad looks her best from a distance. You miss the filthy, narrow streets where two horses can hardly walk abreast and behold a vision of luxuriant date groves, out of which rise little islands of green domes and graceful minarets. In the days of its splendor the East India company maintained in the city of the caliphs a resident, with a generous establishment. Nowadays we are content with the usual modest consular service.—London Spectator.

After hesitating for a few moments, not from fear but in doubt, she gathered herself to spring, and made a dash like an antelope along the sand for the mouth of the cave, for she knew that Saad would not risk wasting his shot on her while she was running. She stopped just under the shelter of the rock and called inward:

"Saad is coming down the rock with his gun!" she cried. "Load your weapon!"

When she had given this warning she went out again and stood before the mouth of the cave with her back to it. Saad was on the rock, not 50 feet above the ground, at the other side of the natural wall, but looked as if even he could get no farther down. He was standing with both his heels on a ledge so narrow that more than half the length of his brown feet stood over it; he was leaning back, flat against the sloping cliff, and he had his gun before him, for he was just able to use both his hands without falling. He pointed the gun at her and spoke:

"Where is the man?"

"He is dead," Baraka answered without hesitation.

"Dead? Already?"

"I killed him in his sleep," she said, "and I dragged his body into the cave for fear of the vulture, and buried it in the sand. Be not angry, Saad, though he was my father's guest. Come down hither and I will tell all. Then you shall shoot me or take me home to be your wife, as you will, for I am quite innocent."

She meant to entice him within range of the stranger's weapon.

"There is no foothold whereby to get lower," he answered, but he rested the stock of his gun on the narrow ledge behind him.

"Drag out the man's body, that I may see it."

"I tell you I buried it. I killed him the night before last; I cannot dig him up now."

"Why did you run to the mouth of the cave when you saw me, if the man is dead?"

"Because at first I was afraid you would shoot me from above, therefore I took shelter."

"Why did you come out again, if you were in fear?"

"After I had run in I was ashamed, for I felt sure that you would not kill me without hearing the truth. So I came out to speak with you. Get down, and I will show you the man's grave."

"Have I wings? I cannot come down. It is impossible."

Baraka felt a puff of hot air pass her, just above her right ankle, and at the same instant she heard a sharp report, not very loud, and more like the snapping of a strong but very dry stick than the explosion of firearms. She instinctively sprang to the left, keeping her eyes on Saad.

For a moment he did not move. But he was already dead as he slowly bent forward from the rock, making a deep obeisance with both arms hanging down before him, so that his body shot down perpendicularly to the sand, where it struck head first, rolled over and lay motionless in a heap. The traveler's was a Mauser pistol that would have killed as surely at 500 yards as 50; and the bullet had gone through the Tartar's brain.

Baraka sprang up the sandy slope and ran along the narrow beach to the body. In an instant she had detached the large brown water-gourd from the thong by which he it had hung over Saad's shoulder, and she felt that it was full. Without a thought for herself she hastened back to the mouth of the cave where the traveler was now standing. His face was dripping with perspiration that ran down into his matted golden beard, his eyes were wild, his hands were bleeding.

"Drink!" cried Baraka joyfully, and she gave him the gourd.

He gripped it as a greedy dog snaps at a bit of meat, and pulling out the wooden plug he set the gourd to his lips, with an expression of beatitude. But he was an old traveler and only drank a little, knowing that his life might depend on making the small supply last. A gourd of water was worth more than many rubies just then.

"Are you very thirsty yet?" he asked in a harsh voice.

"No," answered Baraka bravely; "keep it for yourself."

His hand closed round the neck of the gourd and he looked up towards the rocks above. The vulture had come back and was circling slowly down.

"You had better bury the body, while I go on working," said the traveler, turning back into the cave and taking the gourd with him.

Baraka had marked the place where he had tried to dig for water and had almost disappeared in the quicksand. She took from the body the wallet, in which were dates and some half-dry bread, and then dragged and pushed and rolled the dead man from the place where he had fallen. The vulture sat on the lowest ledge where his claws could find a hold, and though he watched her with horrible red eyes while she robbed him of his prey, he did not dare go nearer.

The body sank into the moving sand, and Baraka had to roll herself back to firmer ground in haste to escape being swallowed up with the dead man. The last she saw of him was one brown foot sticking up. It sank slowly out of sight, and then she went to the hollow where the ruby mine was and took up a piece of the broken crust, full of precious stones, and threw it at the vulture as hard as she could. It did not hit him, but he at once tumbled off the ledge into the air, opened his queer, bedraggled wings and struck upwards.

Then Baraka sat down in the shade and slowly brushed away the dry sand that had got into the folds of her linen garment, and looked steadily at the mouth of the cave and tried not to realize that her throat was parched and her lips almost cracking with thirst, and that the traveler had a gourd almost full of water with him. For she loved him, and was willing to die that he might live a little longer; besides, if he succeeded in digging his way out, there would be plenty to drink, and when he was free she was sure that he would love her because she had made him so rich.

The sun rose higher and at last shone down to the bottom of the chasm, and she sat in the narrow strip of shade, where she had passed most of the previous day. She was very thirsty and feverish, and felt tired, and wished she could sleep, but could not. Still the traveler toiled in the darkness, and from time to time she heard sounds from far away as of stones and loose earth falling. He was still working hard, for he was very strong and he was desperate.

Baraka thought that if he was able to dig through the dam the water would run in again, and she watched the sand for hours, but it was drier than ever. The shadow broadened again, and crept up the rock quickly as the afternoon passed.

It was a long time since she had heard any sound from the cave; she went to the entrance and listened, but all was quite still. Perhaps the traveler had fallen asleep from exhaustion, too tired even to drag himself out into the air when he could work no longer. She sat down in the entrance and waited.

An hour passed. Perhaps he was dead. At the mere inward suggestion Baraka sprang to her feet, and her heart beat frantically, and stood still an instant, and then beat again as if it would burst, and she could hardly breathe. She steadied herself against the rock, and then went in to know the truth, feeling her way, and instinctively shading her eyes as many people do in the dark.

A breath of cool air made her open them, and to her amazement there was light before her. She thought she must have turned quite round while she was walking, and that she was going back to the entrance, so she turned again. But in a few seconds there was light before her once more, and soon she saw the dry sand, full of her footprints and the traveler's, and then the hollow where the mine was came in sight.

She retraced her steps a second time, saw the light as before, ran forward on the smooth sand and stumbled upon a heap of earth and stones, just as she saw the sky through an irregular opening on the level of her face. Scarcely believing her senses she thrust out her hand towards the hole. It was real, and she was not dreaming; the traveler had got out and was gone, recking little of what might happen to her, since he was free with his treasure.

Went to the Entrance and Listened.

Baraka crept up the slope of earth as quickly as she could and got out; if she had hoped to find him waiting for her she was disappointed, for he was nowhere to be seen. He had got clear away, with his camel-bag full of rubies. A moment later she was lying on the ground, with her face in the stream, drinking her fill, and forgetful even of the man she loved. In order to deprive them of water the men had dug a channel by which it ran down directly from the spring to the ravine on that side; then they had blocked up the entrance with stones and earth, believing that one man's strength could never suffice to break through, and they had gone away. They had probably buried or burnt Baraka's clothes, for she did not see them anywhere.

She ate some of the dates from the dead man's wallet, and a bit of the dry black bread, and felt revived, since her greatest need had been for water, and that was satisfied. But when she had eaten and drunk, and had washed herself in the stream and twisted up her hair, she sat down upon a rock, and she felt so tired that she would have fallen asleep if the pain in her heart had not kept her awake. She clasped her hands together on her knees and bent over them, rocking herself.

When nearly an hour had passed she looked up and saw that the sun was sinking, for the shadows were turning purple in the deep gorge, and there was a golden light on the peaks above. She listened then, holding her breath; but there was no sound except the tinkling of the tiny stream as it fell over a ledge at some distance below her, following its new way down into the valley.

She rose at last, looked upward, and seemed about to go away when a thought occurred to her, which afterwards led to very singular consequences. Instead of going down the valley or climbing up out of it, she went back to the entrance of the cave, taking the wallet with her, dragged herself in once more over the loose stones and earth, reached the secret hollow where the pool had been, and made straight for the little mine of precious stones. The traveler had broken out many more than he had been able to carry, but she did not try to collect them all. She was not altogether ignorant of the trade carried on by the men of her family for generations, and though she had not the least idea of the real value of the finest of the rubies, she knew very well that it would be wise to take many small ones which she could exchange for clothing and necessaries with the first women she met in the hills, while hiding the rest of the supply she would be able to carry in the wallet.

When she had made her wise selection, she looked once more towards the quicksand, and left the place for ever. Once outside she began to climb the rocks as fast as she could, for very soon it would be night and she would have to lie down and wait many hours for the day, since there was no moon, and the way was very dangerous, even for a Tartar girl who could almost tread on air.

High up on the mountain, over the dry well where Baraka and the stranger had been imprisoned, the vulture perched alone with empty craw and drooping wings. But it was of no use for him to wait; the living, who might have died of hunger and thirst, were gone, and the body of dead Saad lay fathoms deep in the quicksand, in the very maw of the mountain.

CHAPTER II.

There was good copy for the newspapers on both sides of the Atlantic in the news that the famous lyric soprano, Margarita da Cordova, whose real name was Miss Margaret Donne, was engaged to Mons. Konstantin Logotheti, a Greek financier of large fortune established in Paris, and almost as well known to art collectors as to needy governments, would-be promoters, and mothers of marriageable daughters.

The engagement was made known during the height of the London season, not long after they had both been at a week-end party at Craythew, Lord Creedmore's place in Derbyshire, where they had apparently come to a final understanding after knowing each other more than two years. Margaret was engaged to sing at Covent Garden that summer, and the first mention of the match was coupled with the information that she intended to cancel all her engagements and never appear in public again. The result was that the next time she came down the stage to sing the Waltz Song in "Romeo and Juliet" she received a tremendous ovation before she opened her handsome lips, and another when she had finished the air; and she spent one of the happiest evenings she remembered.

Though she was at heart a nice English girl, not much over 24 years of age, the orphan daughter of an Oxford don who had married an American, she had developed, or fallen, to the point at which very popular and successful artists cannot live at all without applause, and are not happy unless they receive a certain amount of adulation. Even the envy they excite in their rivals is delicious, if not almost necessary to them.

Margaret's real nature had not been changed by a success that had been altogether phenomenal and had probably not been approached by any soprano since Mme. Bonanni; but a second nature had grown upon it and threatened to hide it from all but those who knew her very well indeed. The inward Margaret was honest and brave, rather sensitive, and still generous; the outward woman, the prima donna whom most people saw, was self-possessed to a fault, imperious when contradicted, and coolly ruthless when her artistic fame was at stake. The two natures did not agree well together, and made her wretched when they quarreled, but Logotheti, who was going to take her for better, for worse, professed to like them both, and was the only man she had ever known who did. That was one reason why she was going to marry him, after having refused him about a dozen times.

She had loved another man as much as she was capable of loving, and at one time he had loved her, but a misunderstanding and her devotion to her art had temporarily separated them; and later, when she had almost told him that she would have him if he asked her, he had answered her quite frankly that she was no longer the girl he had cared for, and he had suddenly disappeared from her life altogether. So Logotheti, brilliant, very rich, gifted, gay, and rather exotic in appearance and manner, but tenacious as a bloodhound, had won the prize after a struggle that had lasted two years. She had accepted him without much enthusiasm at the last, and without any great show of feeling.

"Let's try it," she had said, and he had been more than satisfied.

After a time, therefore, they told their friends that they were going to "try it."

The only woman with whom the great singer was at all intimate was the Countess Leven, Lord Creedmore's daughter, generally called "Lady Maud," whose husband had been in the diplomacy, and, after vainly trying to divorce her, had been killed in St. Petersburg by a bomb meant for a minister. The explosion had been so terrific that the dead man's identity had only been established by means of his pocket-book, which somehow escaped destruction. So Lady Maud was a childless widow of eight-and-twenty. Her father, when he had no prospect of ever succeeding to the title, had been a successful barrister, and then a hard-working member of parliament, and he had been from boyhood the close friend of Margaret's father. Hence the intimacy that grew up quickly between the two women when they at last met, though they had not known each other as children, because the lawyer had lived in town and his friend in Oxford.

"So you're going to try it, my dear!" said Lady Maud, when she heard the news.

She had a sweet low voice, and when she spoke now it was a little sad; for she had "tried it," and it had failed miserably. But she knew that the trial had not been a fair one; the only man she had ever cared for had been killed in South Africa, and as she had not even the excuse of having been engaged to him, she had married with indifference the first handsome man with a good name and a fair fortune who offered himself. He chanced to be a Russian diplomatist, and he turned out a spendthrift and an unfaithful husband. She was too kind-hearted to be glad that he had been blown to atoms by dynamite, but she was much too natural not to enjoy the liberty restored to her by his destruction; and she had not the least intention of ever "trying it" again.

"You don't sound very enthusiastic," laughed Margaret, who had no misgivings to speak of, and was generally a cheerful person. "If you don't encourage me I may not go on."

"There are two kinds of ruined gamblers," answered Lady Maud; "there are those that still like to watch other people play, and those who cannot bear the sight of a roulette table. I'm one of the second kind, but I'll come to the wedding all the same, and cheer like mad, if you ask me."

"That's nice of you. I really think I mean to marry him, and I wish you would help me with my wedding gown, dear. It would be dreadful if I looked like Juliet, or Elsa, or Lucia! Everybody would laugh, especially as Konstantin is rather of the Romeo type, with his almond-shaped eyes and his little black mustache! I suppose he really is, isn't he?"

"Perhaps—just a little. But he is a very handsome fellow."

Lady Maud's lips quivered, but Margaret did not see.

"Oh, I know!" she cried, laughing and shaking her head. "You once called him 'exotic,' and he is—but I'm awfully fond of him all the same. Isn't that enough to marry on when there's everything else? You really will help me with my gown, won't you? You're such an angel!"

"Oh, yes, I'll do anything you like. Are you going to have a regular knock-down-and-drag-out smash at St. George's? The usual thing?"

Lady Maud did not despise slang, but she made it sound like music.

"No," answered Margaret, rather regretfully. "We cannot possibly be married till the season's quite over, or perhaps in the autumn, and then there will be nobody here. I'm not sure when I shall feel like it! Besides, Konstantin hates that sort of thing."

"Do you mean to say that you would like a show wedding in Hanover Square?" inquired Lady Maud.

"I've never done anything in a church," said the prima donna, rather enigmatically, but as if she would like to.

"'Anything in a church,'" repeated her friend, vaguely thoughtful, and with the slightest possible interrogation. "That's a funny way of looking at it!"

Margaret was a little ashamed of what she had said so naturally.

"I think Konstantin would like to have it in a chapel-of-ease in the Old Kent Road!" she said, laughing. "He sometimes talks of being married in tweeds and driving off in a hansom! Then he suggests going to Constantinople and getting it done by the patriarch, who is his uncle. Really, that would be rather smart, wouldn't it?"

"Distinctly," assented Lady Maud. "But if you do that, I'm afraid I cannot help you with the wedding gown. I don't know anything about the dress of a Fanariote bride."

"Konstantin says they dress very well," Margaret said. "But of course it is out of the question to do anything so ridiculous. It will end in the chapel-of-ease, I'm sure. He always has his own way. That's probably why I'm going to marry him, just because he insists on it. I don't see any other very convincing reason."

Lady Maud could not think of anything to say in answer to this; but as she really liked the singer she thought it was a pity.

Paul Griggs, the veteran man of letters, smiled rather sadly when she met him shopping in New Bond street, and told him of Margaret's engagement. He said that most great singers married because the only way to the divorce court led up the steps of the altar. Though he knew the world he was not a cynic, and Lady Maud herself wondered how long it would be before Logotheti and his wife separated.

"But they are not married yet," Griggs added, looking at her with the quietly ready expression of a man who is willing that his indifferent words should be taken to have a special meaning if the person to whom he has spoken chooses, or is able, to understand them as they may be understood, but who is quite safe from being suspected of suggesting anything if there is no answering word or glance.

Lady Maud returned his look, but her handsome face grew rather cold.

"Do you know of any reason why the marriage should not take place?" she inquired after a moment.

"If I don't give any reason, am I ever afterwards to hold my peace?" asked Griggs, with a faint smile on his weather-beaten face. "Are you publishing the bans? or are we thinking of the same thing?"

"I suppose we are. Good-morning."

She nodded gravely and passed on, gathering up her black skirt a little, for there had been a shower. He stood still a moment before the shop window and looked after her, gravely admiring her figure and her walk, as he might have admired a very valuable thoroughbred. She was wearing mourning for her husband, not because any one would have blamed her if she had not done so, considering how he had treated her, but out of natural self-respect.

Griggs also looked after her as she went away because he felt that she was not quite pleased with him for having suggested that he and she had both been thinking of the same thing.

The thought concerned a third person, and one who rarely allowed himself to be overlooked; no less a man, in fact, than Mr. Rufus Van Torp, the American potentate of the great Nickel Trust, who was Lady Maud's most intimate friend, and who had long desired to make the prima donna his wife. He had bought a place adjoining Lord Creedmore's, and there had lately been a good deal of quite groundless gossip about him and Lady Maud, which had very nearly become a scandal. The truth was that they were the best friends in the world, and nothing more. He millionaire had for some time been interested in an unusual sort of charity which almost filled the lonely widow's life, and he had given considerable sums of money to help it. During the months preceding the beginning of this tale, he had also been the object of one of those dastardly attacks to which very rich and important financiers are more exposed than other men, and he had actually been accused of having done away with his partner's daughter, who had come to her end mysteriously during a panic in a New York theater. But his innocence had been proved in the clearest manner, and he had returned to the United States to look after the interests of the Trust.

When Griggs heard the news of Margaret's engagement to Logotheti, he immediately began to wonder how Mr. Van Torp would receive the intelligence; and if it had not already occurred to Lady Maud that the millionaire might make a final effort to rout his rival and marry the prima donna himself, the old author's observation suggested such a possibility. Van Torp was a man who had fought up to success and fortune with little regard for the obstacles he found in his way; he had worked as a cowboy in his early youth, and was apt to look on his adversaries and rivals in life either as refractory cattle or as dangerous wild beasts; and though he had some of the old-fashioned ranchero's sense of fair play in a fight, he had much of the reckless daring and ruthless savagery that characterize the fast-disappearing western desperado.

Logotheti, on the other hand, was in many respects a true oriental, supremely astute and superlatively calm, but imbued, at heart, with a truly eastern contempt for any law that chanced to oppose his wish.

Both men had practically inexhaustible resources at their command, and both were determined to marry the prima donna. It occurred to Paul Griggs that a real struggle between such a pair of adversaries would be worth watching. There was unlimited money on both sides, and equal courage and determination. The Greek was the more cunning of the two, by great odds, and had now the considerable advantage of having been accepted by the lady; but the American was far more regardless of consequences to himself or to others in the pursuit of what he wanted, and, short of committing a crime, would put at least as broad an interpretation on the law. Logotheti had always lived in a highly civilized society, even in Constantinople, for it is the greatest mistake to imagine that the upper classes of Greeks, in Greece or Turkey, are at all deficient in cultivation. Van Torp, on the contrary, had run away from civilization when a half-educated boy, he had grown to manhood in a community of men who had little respect for anything and feared nothing at all, and he had won success in a field where those who compete for it buy it at any price, from a lie to a life.

CITY GIRLS' TEAM DEFEATS BOROUGH'S

The Girls' basketball team of the Plainfield High School defeated their old rivals of the North Plainfield High in the last game of the season, played yesterday afternoon by a score of 12 to 10 after a spectacular contest. The local team has a fine record for the season, losing but three of the fourteen games played.

Miss Durar made the first basket for the locals after a pretty pass. She was quickly followed by a well thrown basket by Miss Hummel, for North Plainfield and so on to the finish.

Both Miss Stewart and Miss Durar played brilliantly for P. H. S. while Miss Hummel starred for the borough girls. The lineup—Plainfield, forwards, Misses Stewart and Durar; center, Miss Douglas; guards, Misses Wean and E. Phillips. North Plainfield—forwards Misses Hummell and Mair; center, Miss Carson; guards, Misses Wedhams and Smith. Referee Miss Day; scorers Alfred Manley and N. Heiner; timers, G. Bristol and G. Townley.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

In her new comedy "In Search of a Sinner, at the Plainfield theatre next Tuesday night, Lillian Russell has a novel twist which in a measure pokes innocent fun at the various new thought movements and mental telepathy and yet in a way that lends a novel touch to the telling and leaves one guessing to the author's evident intent.

Free transfers are assured over the various fun routes that lead to the connecting lines of melody that circumnavigate the entire structure of "McFadden's Flats" at the Plainfield theatre Thursday next matinee and night. Passengers purchasing through tickets are allowed only two stop-over privileges ;they are between acts so as to enable the company's operators to make the necessary shift of scenic arrangements and change of costumes with which to enliven the picturesque journey of pleasurable pastime.

MINING AS A BUSINESS.

Former Mayor Saunders Says It Is Less Speculative Than Railroad and the Most Profitable Business in the World.

President William L. Saunders, of the Ingersoll-Rand Company, large manufacturers of mining machinery, says in an interview published on Thursday:

"Mining is somewhat like farming, in that it is a business that can always find quick cash markets for its products. The mining interests of this country have saved all of us from what looked like a long period of commercial depression, as the most sagacious financiers saw the business prospect last year. Our gold production has exerted a most powerful energy in the uplift of the industries of the whole country.

"The quickening of business which is happily going on throughout the land is in great part due to the results from the tremendous energies of our mine operators, who kept right on developing and marketing products despite the stormy financial skies of last year. Those men who kept right on adding enormously to the resources of the country demonstrated practical patriotism that everybody ought to appreciate.

"When silver mining was hit hard a few years ago, croakers said that the silver industry was almost destroyed. But the silver mine operators were made of sterling metal. * * *Silver mining has a great future. The great silver-using countries are making forward strides in population and increase of the purchasing power of units of population. The expansion of gold production is helping the silver, copper, lead, iron and other mining industries, and, in fact, is stimulating the increase of the material well-being of people in all lands.

"It is remarkable that in a community like New York, which is most largely engaged in ordinary merchandising at very small profits, there are so many men who regard mining as a speculative business Mining is an exact science, devoted to strictly commercial ends, and it is by far the most profitable business in the world. Speculation is a very small factor in mining. No other interest has paid or is likely to pay so well upon the capital invested as legitimate mining. Compare the results from investments in railroads for many years with the annals of sound mining, and it is easy to see that railroading, in comparison with mining, may be termed a speculative pursuit, whereas mining has made a record that places it among the steadiest dividend earners known in modern times."—New York Sunday World, Sept. 20, 1908.—Adv.

YALE CLUB DINES

E. A. STEVENSON TOASTMASTER.

William A. Cochran, President of Princeton Club, Responds to a Toast—Banquet at the Hunt Club.

The glories and the achievements of Yale University were extolled at the annual banquet of the Yale Club of Plainfield, held at the Watchung Hunt Club, Saturday night, when more than fifty members of the club with a few invited friends gathered to enjoy a fine dinner and speeches by Prof. William B. Bailey, of the economic department of Yale University, and Henry J. Cochran, who is president of the Princeton Club of Plainfield. Edward A. Stevenson was the toastmaster and he made a fine one. The dining-room was elaborately decorated for the occasion with the university color, blue, presenting an attractive picture.

The Yale spirit and enthusiasm was a marked feature and a guest would never know that there was any other university or college in existence. The members and guests made the trip from town to the clubhouse in automobiles and stages, and the dinner was started at 7:30 o'clock. Steward Sidney Richmond prepared and served a fine dinner, there being an abundance of meat and drink.

After a brief address to the members of the club, Mr. Stevenson introduced the speaker of the evening, Prof. Bailey, class '94, Yale University. He represents the younger element in the faculty and is extremely popular with the students. He was a classmate of Frederick W. Yates, of this city, and a personal friend of Charles H. Frost, whose guest he was while in the city.

Prof. Bailey confined his remarks almost entirely to the more recent changes in the curriculum, the university idea, that of grouping the various departments. In this way the subjects can be taught more effectively, it is possible to pay better salaries in the different courses.

The speaker said that the elective system has been changed, prescribed and modified to certain subjects during the junior and senior years so that a student will get major and minor parts of the course. He spoke of the popularity of Dean Wright, who has been succeeded by Dean Jones, contrasting the difference, the latter's characteristics being entirely opposite from those of Dean Wright.

Prof. Bailey said that the alumni association is doing great work, especially in its contributions to a fund to raise the salaries of instructors and professors. In this way a professor is able to follow his chosen work with less of a sacrifice and need not worry about his remuneration. Speaking personally, he said that he had received an offer of three or four times his salary from a school in Oregon, showing that more than sentiment is necessary to retain an efficient faculty at Yale.

The speaker said that Yale seeks to develop original thought and help a student to earn his living. He declared that the student body at Yale is the finest in America, the athletic department being such as to develop the mental and physical strength of a student. He referred to the spirit of persistence at Yale, declaring that it was this fact that led Yale to victory over Princeton and Harvard in football. In his opinion last year's team was the best in the university in twenty years.

The talk of Prof. Bailey aroused the old-time enthusiasm among the Yale men and the speaker was frequently applauded and cheered. Mr. Cochran, who represented Princeton, was given a cordial reception, and his brief remarks were much enjoyed. The affair terminated about 11 o'clock after the Yale cheer was given several times. The committee in charge comprised President E. A. Stevenson, Vice President H. E. Butler, Secretary L. A. Williams, Jr., H. L. DeForest, Arthur Lovell and W. B. Tyler.

Liquor's Record.

Charged with being drunk and disorderly on Saturday afternoon Frank Sheffield, of Scotch Plains, was arranged in the city court this morning and sentence was suspended. Sheffield apologized for his misconduct and as it was his first offense Judge DeMeza let him go.

Russell J. Bell.

Russell J. Bell, aged seven years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Bell, of this city, died at 3 o'clock this morning. The services will be held at the late home tomorrow afternoon and the burial will be at Peckville, Pa., on Wednesday.

AQUATIC MEET HELD AT MONTCLAIR Y.M.C.A.

Chauncey Stewart, one of the four representatives of the Y. M. C. A., in the first annual boys' department aquatic meet of the State association at Montclair, Saturday night, finished second in the 22-yard swim, in the 95-pound class. J. Smith, of Montclair, won this event, his time being 12 seconds. Plainfield scored three points in the meet, which is good considering the number of entries.

The meet was the biggest event of the kind ever held in New Jersey. The Montclair swimmers won the point trophy, rolling up a total of 37½ points. There were events for swimmers weighing from 95 to 130 pounds and over. Eight branch associations were represented. The points scored was as follows: Montclair, 37½; Newark, 12½; Paterson, 9; Madison, 6; Passaic, 3; Plainfield, 3; Elizabeth, 1.

NEW TEAM OF HORSES FOR NO. 4 HOUSE

The councilmanic fire committee held a short meeting, Saturday night, chiefly to discuss the budget for the coming year. The members had been in session but a few minutes when box 12 was pulled and a hasty adjournment was taken. The fire committee received about $36,000 last year, and it was decided that if an automobile apparatus is to be secured for the department this year, an appropriation of about $50,000 will be needed.

There is a strong impression that an auto apparatus is needed in the city, it being difficult to secure suitable horses. The committee admits that it has had an unusual luck in getting a team for the Netherwood fire house, but the members say that the same trouble is likely to occur anywhere else.

The committee has endeavored to secure a pair of seasoned horses, but they seem to be scarce, and of late have been trying western breed. It has been decided to send the new team at the Netherwood fire house back to New York. Another horse is needed at the West Fourth street house to take the place of one suffering with heart trouble. The committee will hold another meeting Wednesday night when this matter will be discussed further.

The task of securing a suitable team of horses was delegated to Councilman W. W. Wilson, of the fire committee, and yesterday he and Captain William Townley went to Elizabeth and picked a fine team of dark greys at the stables of L. F. Hersh & Bro. The horses are about 16.1 hands, weight about 1,500 pounds each and are well seasoned. The price put on the team was $800, but the committee is hoping that it will be able to get the animals for $750. It is likely that the horses will be placed in the Netherwood district fire house today, provided the deal is closed.

USEFUL MEMORIAL FOR SCOTCH PLAINS CHURCH.

Dr. J. Ackerman Coles and his sister, Miss Emlie Coles, propose in the near future to make a memorial gift to the Baptist church at Scotch Plains. It will take the form, it is understood, of a building which will more adequately meet the needs of the parish.

Dr. Coles and Miss Coles are among the faithful members of the Baptist church, and although they live in New York during the winter months, they have always retained a deep interest not only in the church, but in every phase of the village life that tends for the betterment of conditions.

Will Hold a Mission Rally.

The Women's Foreign and Home Mission Societies, the Young Women's Mission Society and the Junior Mission Band of the First Baptist church, will hold an important missionary meeting at the church Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at which time Miss Lyde Jenkins, of Pennsylvania, will make the address. The meeting will be in the form of a rally and all women interested in missions are urged to be present.

Converted Karen to Speak.

Miss Nellie Yaba, a native convert of Burmah, will speak at the First Baptist church, next Sunday evening, under the auspices of the Young People's Association. She is the daughter of a Karen, who was educated in the United States by the First Baptist church some forty years ago, and is now preaching in his home land.

Present Your Bills.

All bills against the city must be in the hands of the city clerk by tomorrow night to insure payment at the regular April meeting.

BISHOP PREACHES

Rt. Rev. Dr. Lloyd Addresses Two Large Congregations at Grace Church.

PLEA FOR MISSIONARY WORK.

The Bishop-Coadjutor of Virginia Says Money is the Sword for Spreading Christ's Kingdom.

A missionary sermon in two parts, morning and afternoon, served to draw two large congregations to Grace Episcopal church, yesterday, Right Reverend Arthur S. Lloyd, bishop coadjutor, diocese of Virginia, being the preacher. Explaining that it would be impossible to say what he had to say in the twenty minutes allotted to him, he urged the people to return to the afternoon service and several hundred did so. The bishop is president of the Board of Missions of the Episcopal Church in the United States.

At the morning service Bishop Lloyd took part of the thirteenth verse of the fourth chapter of Saint Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, "That ye measure up to the fulness of the stature of Christ," and said in part:

"I want you to keep the words of this text ever before you. Our point of view determines the value of this gospel. We are not to view it as did the religionists of old, but we ought to see it through the eyes of Christ. There is no new morality—there is but the one. Christ changed the view of those to whom he preached and Saint Paul was a great example of a changed view.

"If you reduce your religion to a mere form or system you are putting yourselves into the category of the Buddhists. We call them heathen, but that word ought never to be used. If you do use it in reference to the unconverted it shows that you think that you are better than they are, and you are not.

"Why shouldn't the Buddhist and Mohammedan be permitted to have their own religious views? Why should we force our religion upon them? The belittling of missions has more to do with the breaking down of American ideals than anything else. The kindest service one can do is to give direction to a bewildered mind. Saint Paul was talking of fidelity when he wrote the words of the text and sooner or later, if the precept is followed, America will come up to the standard that God would have.

"And does not that hope make life worth while? Civilization in a word is the word of the text. We have the message, let us pass it on. Christ believed in human nature and understood it. Saint Paul also understood and did more for the human family than any other man excepting the Master himself.

"I think we will all want to stand up when Christ asks 'who is on my side?' Anyway, keep the text in mind and be able to say at the end 'I have kept the faith.'"

"I have come that they might have life more abundantly," Saint John 10:10, was the text in the afternoon. The bishop said that Christ emptied himself of His glory that man might be filled with it. And that means that we are to live right, controlling our bodies in all things. "There is sin in all of us," he said, "but only because we let it control us. Everything made for human uplift is founded on God's word. Liberty from superstition is the true Christian liberty and Christianity is the key that God has put into our hands to remove the mystery of eternal life.

"Can you imagine Plainfield in a state of chaos, without churches, without any of the things you now possess, a desolate land full of uncivilized and un-Christian people, without hope? Then picture to yourself a kindly woman or man coming among you and lifting the burden of your darkness and sorrow. Can you not see what the change would mean? Don't you see how the whole system of life would be changed here?

"Those out of Christ want the Jesus wisdom," I like that phrase better than 'religion.' It brings the more abundant life."

The speaker declared that the one-quarter of million men in the church in this country had the power to Christianize the world and that their money is their sword for doing the Master's work. "Missionary work," he said, "must be done by men who are willing to take the trouble to help the man who is down. All over America the movement of foreign missionary work is spreading and remember the question is not 'how much can I spare for missions, but how much of God's money ought I keep for myself.'"

VIOLATED AUTO LAW; WATSON IS FINED $18

John Watson, son-in-law of Michael Watson, of the west end, had to pay $18 into the treasury of the Elizabeth police for having brought an automobile into this State without having gone through the formality of purchasing a New Jersey license.

The story runs that Mr. Watson purchased a new Hupmobile in New York on Saturday and attempted to bring it to Plainfield with the New York license tag hanging in its regular place on the machine. He was spied by a motorcycle cop in Elizabeth and was chased as far as Roselle where after a short conversation Mr. Watson was escorted back to Elizabeth and punctured to the tune of eighteen plunks.

MAKING FINAL MOVE FOR POST OFFICE SITE

William A. Woodruff, J. Fred MacDonald and Frank H. Smith, commissioners appointed by Judge Reilstab, of Trenton, to condemn 62.76 feet of land on Watchung avenue, owned by the Society of Friends, Hicksite, to be used as a part of the site for a Federal building, will report Tuesday morning, April 11, at 10 o'clock at the office of Codington & Swackhamer. This is the last step in the condemnation proceedings of the land needed for the new postoffice building, the commissioners having previously performed a similar service in the matter of the property of A. L. Force and his relatives.

That portion of the land owned by the Friends which is required, adjoins the Force property and has a frontage of 62.76 feet, which is needed to give the total frontage, 150 feet, required by the government. The commissioners met on Saturday and made an inspection of the property. Following their report the government will settle with the owners and close the transaction.

CLEAN AWAY DEBRIS AT BURNED COLLEGE

Work was begun this morning by Contractor William E. Bartle on the ruins of Mopnt St. Mary College. Mr. Bartle has put a force of men to work cleaning up the debris so that a thorough examination of the remaining walls may be made. The results of this examination will determine the amount of stone work which must be removed and replaced and a more careful estimate of the work which will have to be done to restore the edifice to its former beauty.

It is hoped that the structure will be ready for occupancy in the fall and every effort will be exerted to accomplish this result. It is possible that some of the original stone work may have to be removed and a larger portion than was at first thought necessary entirely rebuilt.

It was announced on Saturday that Bourke Cochran, the famous Irish orator and former Congressman, would deliver a lecture in Elizabeth at an entertainment which has been arranged for the benefit of the college. Mayor Stein, of that city, in company with W. J. McCloud and Lawrence O'Donnell, have about completed arrangements for the entertainment and only succeeded in securing Mr. Cochran after some correspondence in which the dire needs of the Sisters of Mercy were plainly stated. The lecture and other features will be given in Y. M. C. A. hall on the evening of Sunday, April 23.

Successful Cake Sale.

Under the auspices of the Home Department of Trinity Reformed church Sunday school, a successful cake sale was held at the church, Saturday afternoon, the net proceeds being $12.25. Mrs. Philip Vroom was chairman of the general committee comprising Mrs. Julius Williams, Mrs. L. B. VanCamp, Mrs. F. P. Storr, Mrs. W. F. Oliver, Mrs. A. Krymer, Mrs. A. E. Gunegan, Mrs. A. T. Runyon, Mrs. Albertus Swalm, Mrs. J. Heideloff, Mrs. Jacob Angerbauer and Mrs. Winfield Schomp.

Chicken Salad and Oyster Supper.

The Young Women's Mission Band of Trinity Reformed church will give a chicken salad and oyster supper at the church tomorrow evening, and will also conduct a sale of homemade candy. The price of tickets for the supper will be thirty-five cents and a fine supper is promised. The proceeds will be used for missions.

The Rasores to Meet.

The Rasores will meet tomorrow morning with Mrs. W. D. Murray, 205 West Ninth street. Subject, "Catharine Sedgwick."

HIS 70TH BIRTHRAY

Rev. Dr. Joseph C. Buchanan Reaches Three Score and Ten Milestone.

IT IS A DUAL CELEBRATION.

William H. Bishop, Whose Natal Day is the Same, Joins With Minister in Observing the Event.

Seventy years seems to be the natural time for celebrating birthdays in this section of New Jersey. In another story will be found the details of a family affair in which the celebrant was seventy years old yesterday. In this tale two others are concerned of which it may be said "they are still in the ring." Rev. Dr. James C. Buchanan, a retired Baptist clergyman, is talking over old times with his co-celebrator, William H. Bishop, of Pemberton, and it is certain that while the experiences of both men would be worth while studying, neither has any thought beyond that of congratulating his life-long friend on having reached the biblical limit in the enjoyment of the health that only rightful living can bring.

Rev. Dr. Buchanan has been in the habit of visiting Mr. Bishop on their natal day, a close friendship having always existed between them and today marks another mile post in their lives which will require an extra session. This afternoon Mr. Bishop will accompany Rev. Dr. Buchanan from Pemberton to the home of Dr. J. H. Buchanan, on Duer street and there, in the contemplation of the things which go to make life worth while living the two men will quietly pass the compliments of the day and incidentally rehearse the doings of the past half century.

Dr. Buchanan only relinquished his militant Christian service four years ago. He was pastor of the Scotch Plains Baptist church from 1867 until 1878 and of the Baptist church at Pemberton until his retirement. He was a graduate of Colgate University. His wife is living and his only son is Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, with whom they make their home.

Congratulations from their many friends have reached the two distinguished men today and it is certain that more will be received this evening at the Duer street home.

W. W. WARNOCK'S IDEAL BAKERY OPENED TODAY.

Unexcelled in its appointments and splendid in its sanitary appointments, W. W. Warnock's ideal bakery at the southeast corner of North and Park avenues was opened today for business. The skilled bakers employed by Mr. Warnock have been working overtime making a large supply of home-made bread, delicious pies, Waldorf rolls, Maryland biscuit, Dundee cakes, Florence cakes and specialties for which the shop is noted. Intermingled with the choice display of goods in the windows are bunches of cut flowers, making the store exceptionally attractive.

The housewife will profit by paying Warnock's a visit.

Funeral of Mrs. Cronce.

The funeral services of Mrs. Martin V. B. Cronce were held at the late home, Saturday afternoon, and were largely attended. Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, pastor of the First Baptist church, of which Mrs. Cronce was a member for many years, officiated. There were many beautiful floral tributes. The burial was in the Baptist cemetery on Plainfield avenue, and the ebarers were Frederick Pearce, John Stafford, Francis Whitley and Peter Stram.

Reception at Bridgeton.

Mr. and Mrs. Winfred Harris, who were married at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Williams, of Essex street, last week, were given a reception Friday night by Mr. and Mrs. L. Hoover Harris, parents of the groom, at their home in Bridgeton. There were about sixty people present and the bride received a number of additional gifts.

Series of Special Sermons.

Rev. Frederic L. Greene, pastor of Hope chapel, will give a series of addresses to men Sunday evenings during the month of April at 8 o'clock. The topics to be discussed are as follows: April 2, Four Types of Men; April 9, A Square Man; April 16, Easter service; April 23, A Man's Margin; April 30, A Wise Man's Choice.

Violated an Ordinance.

Andrew Papas, an employee of Nicolas Futuros, a fruit dealer of West Front street, and William Noyes, of East Third street, were warned this morning by Judge DeMeza in the city court against burning rubbish in the street. They both pleaded ignorance of the ordinance.

PAY LAST RESPECTS TO MRS. STEPHEN GINNA

The funeral services of Mrs. Stephen A. Ginna were held at the late home, 1107 Watchung avenue, Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and were largely attended by relatives, friends and neighbors, who deeply mourned her death. Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, pastor of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, of which Mrs. Ginna was an active member for nearly forty years, conducted the service, reading Scripture lessons and making a brief address of eulogy.

During the services, Miss Kimball, contralto soloist at the Brick Presbyterian church, New York, sang "Peace, Perfect Peace," and "Rest in the Lord." There was a beautiful display of floral tributes, completely covering the bier. The burial was in Hillside cemetery, and the bearers were H. V. Borden, F. W. Yates, M. B. Mellor, A. W. Duxhury, Dr. G. W. Endicott and Percy H. Stewart.

TRAVELERS PLAN FOR AN ANNUAL BANQUET

Under the auspices of Plainfield Council, No. 402, The Order of United Commercial Travelers, a "ladies' night" affair was held Saturday night in the new rooms in the Babcock building, and was attended by about forty of the members and the members of their families. Instrumental and vocal music and cards furnished enjoyment for all during the early part of the evening.

An auxiliary committee was formed for the purpose of working in conjunction with the members of the order, toward the sussess of the men's dinner to be held by the council in Sebring's Hall, Wednesday evening, April 19, and the following were appointed as the officers of the committee:

DEAD IN 81ST YR.

Israel Ten Eyck, a Butcher for Half Century, Passed Away Today.

INFIRMITIES CAUSED HIS END.

For a Time He Was Overseer at City's Industrial Home—He Is Survived by One Daughter.

Israel D. TenEyck, one of Plainfield's oldest and best known residents, died at 9 o'clock this morning at his home on West Second street. He had been infirm for some time because of advanced age but had been about as usual until yesterday morning. He was then unable to leave his bed and it was seen that he was failing rapidly. He continued to grow worse despite every medical attention until the end.

Mr. TenEyck was born near Samptown on the road between South Plainfield and New Market, eighty years ago last January. He learned the butcher's trade when a young man and followed the business in this city for nearly half a century. He was located at Park avenue and Second street for many years, where the Plainfield Trust Company building now is, and more recently had a market on Park avenue, opposite North. Some time after his retirement from business he was appointed overseer of the city alms house at Front street and Rock avenue and remained in this position until four years ago. Since then he had boarded at the home of Mrs. Blackford on West Second street, where he died. His wife passed away a year ago last January.

Mr. TenEyck was said to be the second oldest Mason in the city. He was a member of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 27, F. and A. M., and Jerusalem Chapter, No. 24, R. A. M. He was also a member of the First Baptist church. Mr. TenEyck was a genial, kind-hearted type of man and to all his friends he was known as "Uncle Is." His acquaintanceship throughout the city and borough was unusually wide. He never identified himself with public affairs but in his younger days was a member of the volunteer fire department, being attached to Gazelle Engine Company.

The only surviving relatives are a daughter, Mrs. Wallace V. Miller, of New York; a nephew, J. D. TenEyck, of the firm of TenEyck & Harris, and two grandchildren. The funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

Arrested for Auto Speeding.

Policeman Edward T. Canning, of Watchung, was on the hunt yesterday for auto speeders and as a result arrested a New Yorker named William Herder, who was travelling through the valley above the speed limit. The prisoner was released on his own recognizance to appear later for a hearing. It is the intention of the authorities at Watchung to put a stop to the practice of speeding, and Mayor W. deLaR. Anderson has complimented Policeman Canning on his first arrest.

Rev. James Conover to Preach.

Rev. James Conover, of Pemberton, Burlington county, will preach at the Temple Baptist church next Sunday, as a candidate for the pastorate to succeed Rev. J. W. Musson, who leaves Plainfield this week. Mr. Conover is about forty years of age and is said to have exceptional gifts as a preacher and pastor.

"A Night In Dixie."

"A Night In Dixie" will be the title of a musical entertainment to be given this evening by Lydia Chapter, No. 41, Order Eastern Star, in Masonic Hall, to which Masons, their families and friends have been invited. Admission will be free, but a silver offering will be received. Refreshments will be served.

After Crap Shooters.

"Mayor" W. deLaR. Anderson, of Watchung, has given timely warning to crap shooters who have been in the habit of frequenting favorite spots in the district to play the game. Several complaints have been received and Mr. Anderson says that he will not countenance any such violation of the law.

Sprained Her Ankle.

Mrs. P. Newton Drake, of Verdon street, while descending the steps from the back porch at her home a few days ago, turned her ankle suddenly, resulting in a bad sprain which will detain her at home for some time.

MORE POWER FOR MAYOR.

Camden, March 27.—Practically completing their work of framing a new charter, the commission recently appointed by the City Council Thursday night directed City Counsel Bleakley to have the measure printed in time for presentation to the Legislature next Monday night.

The proposed charter is a radical departure from the present one, in that it confers wide powers on the Mayor. That official is designated as the appointing power for all officeholders, except those of council, and is given authority to dismiss them for cause. He is made head of the police and fire departments, with powers of appointment and discharge and is endowed with the right of veto. The awarding of all contracts is taken out of the hands of Coucil and delegated to a board of contracts, with the Mayor as president. The executive is also made president of a board of estimates to make the yearly appropriations.

Membership in the Council is reduced to twelve—one for each ward. Civil service is provided for all employes except heads of departments, and the initiative, recall and referendum are provided for. The measure is drawn to apply to all second-class cities of the State, but it does not become operative until it is accepted by a vote of the people.

It was claimed that while in a stupor caused by the liquor, the pair went through his pockets, taking the sum mentioned. A physician who was called to attend Anton testified at the trial that the latter acted as though he had been drugged. Again—Spring Styles Decree New Models in Corsets

This specially arranged Spring Display of over 40 styles of the leading makes affords you an unusual opportunity to choose a model, not alone stylish, but adapted to your own requirements.

When stylists decree a change in the styles of outerapparel a corresponding change is made necessary in the designing of the new season's corset models; you will have a tendency towards a lower bust line, a slight nipping in at the waist in the back only—a long skirt extension with the shortening of the bones in the back cutting out of the skirt in the centre front, lighter boning and straight-line goring. Of course, these new changes are technical descriptions to the average woman. What concerns you most is the question as to whether we can fit you in a model best adapted to your individual requirements. And we say, unhesitatingly, we can afford you a full measure of satisfaction in every sense of the word.

Prices Range from $1.00 to $5.00

It Is a Popular Notion

Come in and Talk it Over that nothing is more simple than the preparation of a will. While that may be true in some cases, it certainly is not true if the objects of the testator's bounty are multiplied or if his gifts are less than absolute.

The difficulty of drawing a proper will, which will stand inspection and criticism from all points of view, together with the fact that a Will is an instrument, which is intended to take effect in the future when all conditions may have changed, makes nothing less than the BEST SERVICE in their respect imperative.

Fidelity Trust Co.,
Newark N. J.,

expert in the drawing of wills, always tries to superintend this important function when an estate is to be left in its hands as Executor. The estate gets the advantage of this service.

We WANT COMPETITION of the Right Sort, Not the Following Kind!

A Mrs. S—— after selecting her outfit and learning the total cost from our plainly marked price tags, said she preferred to make comparisons elsewhere before ordering, to which we readily agreed, for it's a thing we always URGE!

On getting another store's prices (where they were marked in private signs) she found ours were far less, and SAID so. The salesman promptly dropped to our figures—AND GOT THE ORDER.

Here, where there's but ONE PLAINLY MARKED PRICE ON EVERY ITEM, such an "accommodating" and sudden price drop would be impossible—here, when you read the price tag, you KNOW it's already at lowest point, for ALL prices are made and REMAIN on the SAME UNIFORMLY SMALL PROFIT BASIS. We don't HAVE to run a "leader" here and there for an hour, or a day, to catch trade, as ALL lines are equally good values EVERY day in the year!

All we want is HONEST competition that meet OUR plainly marked prices WITH prices you can READ!

An Interesting Announcemet From the Interesting Store of
L. S. PLAUT & CO.
"BEE HIVE," NEWARK.

L. S. Plaut & Co. are now holding a special sewing machine demonstration and sale at which they are demonstrating the many merits of their "Bee Hive" sewing machines and setting forth very plainly why they can sell these machines for so much less than the manufacturers.

Primarily among the reasons are these:

FIRST—They are not burdened with any of the manufacturers expense of selling these machines through agents.

SECOND—hey are not burdened with the expense of sending out collectors.

THIRD—They are not burdened with any loss of any bad debts.

All of which naturally reverts to the benefit of their patrons, saving them in many instances as much as they are asked to pay for these machines under the Bee Hive name-plate.

As an instance it may be quoted that the Sewing Machine sold under the manufacturers' own trade-mark commanding $25.00 may be bought from L. S. Plaut & Co. SPECIAL THIS WEEK, for $10.90; affording purchasers an actual saving of $14.10. Their higher grade Bee Hive machines are also offered at proportionate savings.

Among the important sale features of the week at the L. S. Plaut & Co. store are an extraordinary offering of fine French curl and willow Ostrich Plumes at savings ranging from $1 to $5.05 on each plume. These are all brand new perfect goods and come from one of the country's most noted manufacturers.

BASEBALL.

Umpire Bob Pender, who will give decisions in the Eastern League this season, has had experience in the national pastime as a player and manager as well as being an arbiter. Pender held the managerial berth but one season, and after a heartbreaking race his club finished in second and last place. The league was a four-club organization.

The story was told of Erne Lanigan, President Ed Barrow's secretary, and he thought that the yarn was far too good to keep under cover. A glance over the official records for the year in question brought out the fact that Pender's story was true in every detail.

"Talk about close races in baseball," said Lanigan, "well just listen to this one. In 1902 Bob Pender, who will handle the indicator in the Barrow circuit this year, managed the Baton Rouge team in the Cotton States League. The other clubs in the organization were Natchez, Vicksburg and Greenville. The race was a hot one all season long and toward the close of the season every ball and strike called by an umpire caused a fight.

"Pender's team was going along fine, but happened to go bad just before the end of the season. The end of the battle found Natchez in first place, while Baton Rouge, Vicksburg and Greenville were tied for second place. Here is the only case on record where three teams finished in second the last place at the same time. Natchez had a percentage of .519, having won fifty-two games and lost fifty-one. The other clubs had a mark of .495. Baton Rouge won fifty-three and lost fifty-four, Vicksburg had fifty-two victories and fifty-three defeats, while Greenville's total number of wins was fifty-four and the losses fifty-five. Guess you'll have to go some to beat that for a close finish."

GOLF.

When golfers gather on the links of the Englewood Country Club, July 11, 12 and 13, for the annual open championship tournament of the Metropolitan Golf Association, they will find conditions much improved over those which prevailed there during the national open in 1909. Keeping pace with changes on the links will be clubhouse alterations. Provided all the last named contemplated improvements are carried out, an expenditure of $10,000 will be required.

One addition to the building will permit of a number of extra sleeping rooms; also, greatly enlarged locker and bath rooms, to say nothing of better cafe facilities. The dining room accommodations will be increased and there will be a general brightening up of the salon. The club likewise contemplates the erection of a number of bungalows on the rising ground immediately back of the clubhouse.

Between now and next summer the course will be stiffened up considerably, and in place of the grave-like pot bunkers so prevalent these days Englewood is going to incline more toward winding sand heaps with gutterlike formations on either side. These, it is believed, will prove as troublesome as any pits. The tree which was partly in the line of play going to the ninth has been cut down. A series of sand heaps will serve to worry the players who get off the line going to the sixth and tenth holes, as the hazards in question divide these fairways.

The Metropolitan open proper will be held on July 12 and 13, the plan being to devote the first day, July 11, to competitions in which amateurs and professionals will team up as partners. This curtain raiser is given by the Englewood Country Club, which will furnish the prizes. This tournament only partly conflicts with the Wykagyl invitation affair, which is scheduled to begin on July 13.

Little Boy a Suicide.

Less than fourteen years old, Robert Layton, of 586 Carman street, Camden, committed suicide in the Camden County Jail Friday night. With a strap, which he used for a belt, tied about his neck and with the ends strung to the bars of his cell he swung off from his cot. The lad was found dead by Seymour Hunt, one of the jailers. Young Layton was committed to jail a week ago on a charge of malicious mischief, after it was said, he was found in a cellar on Carman street. At 5 o'clock Friday afternoon the boy asked Jailer Hunt what the authorities were going to do with him. He was in apparently great fear of going to the State Home for Boys.

Mrs. Roswell Horr, of Fairview avenue, has recovered from a recent illness.

The Misses May and Florence Wyckoff, of Somerset street, have returned from Bayonne.

Plainfield, N. J., March 27, 1911.

BOROUGH IS GRATEFUL.

His courageous action in advocating justice for North Plainfield in the matter of its proposed sewage disposal plant at Green brook in North Plainfield township, has won for State Senator Frelinghuysen no small meed of praise in the borough. At the beginning, the Senator found himself confronted with a factional fight among his constituents. The Bound Brook people were determined that the plant should not be located near their borders at all hazards and exerted every means to frustrate North Plainfield's plans. Had they succeeded the result would have wrought a great wrong for the borough's committee had expended much valuable time and no small amount of money in making arrangements for the proposed sanitary system. Happily, however, Senator Frelinghuysen did not resort to the more usual method of politicians and wash his hands of the whole affair. Casting aside all selfish interests, he took a firm stand as his remarks in reporting Senate bill, No. 41, conclusively show. Regardless of political pressure, he weighed the merits of the case and governed himself according. For this, North Plainfield is truly grateful.

SOULFUL MUSIC HEARD YESTERDAY

A large congregation attended the musical service in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, last evening. The quartet choir rendered effectively selections from Gounod's "Redemption." This music of weird chords and peculiar cadences was given a realistic interpretation by the singers, all of whom were in excellent voice. The greater part of the music fell to the lot of A. E. Betteridge, basso, and Howard Pratt, tenor, and it was noticeable that these two voices blended in perfect harmony, so much so, that when singing in unison they sounded like a single voice.

Miss Lillian V. Watt and Miss Grace J. Carroll had very little opportunity of demonstrating their vocal abilities, but what they did have to sing they did with their customary ability.

Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie preacher a short sermon which had for its title "The Redemption of a False Start."

COUPLE CELEBRATED SEVENTIETH BIRTHDAY

A number of friends assisted Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Vordermeier to celebrate Mr. Vordermeier's seventieth birthday last evening at their home, 72 Fairview avenue, North Plainfield. Not the least among the features of the evening was the singing of old folk songs by Mr. Vordermeier and his wife. After the musical numbers hed been rendered, Mrs. Vordermeier surprised the guests with an old fashioned supper which all enjoyed.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Martin A. Korff, Miss Emma Korff and Master Alfred Korff, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Delgyer, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Haurand and their two sons, Carl H. and Eugene A., and Mr. and Mrs. G. Adolph Kellar and their son Adolph.

Several fine musical numbers were rendered by Mr. Korff and his children, he with the violin and Miss Emma at the piano and Alfred playing the cornet. Mr. Haurand and G. Otto Kellar provided several sleight-of-hand performances. Master Carl Haurand sang some songs in a manner to charm the company, singing in both English and German.

Finally Mr. Vordermeier received the congratulations of his friends on taking the coveted mark of three score and ten years and hopes for a continuation of his good health. Mr. Vordermeier appears to have escaped the scars generally left by time and is enjoying a remarkably vigorous old-manhood.

Miss Haberle, of Chatham street, who has been under treatment at Muhlenberg Hospital for the past four weeks, went home yesterday.

MISS ERMA YAHRMAN WEDS ORRIN P. CURL

Mrs. Erma Ida Yahrman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Ellinger, of East Sixth street, and Orrin P. Curl, of Dunellen, were quietly married in Philadelphia, yesterday afternoon. The ceremony was performed in the parsonage of the Chester Avenue Baptist church by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Eland, formerly of Washington, and an intimate friend of the groom.

The couple was attended only by the groom's brother, Nathan Curl, of Dunellen, and Mrs. Eland. There were no other witnesses. Mr. and Mrs. Curl will spend a week in Philadelphia and vicinity and on returning will reside temporarily with the bride's parents. Later they will go to housekeeping in a newly furnished home on Dunellen avenue, Dunellen.

Mr. Curl formerly resided at Washington but since living in Dunellen has made many local friends. He is employed by George Schenck, the Dunellen groceryman. Mrs. Curl also has many friends and until her resignation two weeks ago had been employed by Charles L. Stanley, the florist.

A large array of handsome presents received by the young couple gave evidence of the esteem in which they are held.

PLAYED WITH MATCHES; THE SAME OLD STORY.

Children playing with matches started a fire at the home of Charles Ceay, of Richmond street, early last evening. A bureau was set ablaze and for a few minutes things looked bad. An alarm was turned in from box 25 and the firemen did the rest. The damage will reach $50.

An alarm was turned in from box 12 Saturday night for a blazing auto on Park avenue. The machine, a large touring car, belonged to a Mr. Reynolds, of Princeton. A gas tank caught fire in some way and the flames were spreading despite all efforts to head them off. The chemical engine stream did the business in two minutes. The damage was slight.

RUNAWAY CAUGHT IN SCOTCH PLAINS.

Mrs. E. Keppelson, of 1348 West Front street, had a narrow escape from death on Saturday night when a horse she was driving ran away and threw her out. The runaway occurred at 8:45 and before the animal was caught he arrived at Scotch Plains with but little strength left with which to stand up.

When the animal raced past the City National Bank building, A. C. Thompson, was about to crank up his "blue racer," Mr. Thompson hastened the maneuvre and gave chase. The animal was caught by Albert Schenck, of Scotch Plains.

FAREWELL SERMON OF REV. MR. MUSSON

Rev. J. W. Musson preached his farewell sermons at the Temple Baptist church, yesterday morning and evening, both services being attended by large congregations. In the morning there was communion and reception of members. In the afternoon the Sunday-school held special services, at which time Frank Stewart, assistant superintendent, on behalf of the school, expressed the appreciation of all for the services of Mr. and Mrs. Musson and wishing them success in their new field of labor. An informal reception was held and everyone took the opportunity to shake hands with the pastor and his wife.

At the Christian Endeavor Society service in the evening Mr. Stewart again paid tribute to the pastor and his wife for their services and adding that it was through their faithful work that the society had been able to win the county banner. At the evening service Mr. Musson preached a strong sermon.

Mr. and Mrs. Musson will be given a farewell reception tomorrow night by the church people and they will leave Plainfield on Friday for Meriden, Conn., where Mr. Musson will become pastor of the First Baptist church.

SUIT TO RECOVER VALUE OF STORED VINEGAR.

Suit has been brought in the Elizabeth District Court against J. P. W. Taylor, so it is said, to recover the value of some twenty-five barrels of vinegar alleged to have been stored in the cellar of the building corner of North and Park avenues. According to the complaint, the barrels were placed in the cellar with the consent of F. W. Dunn, who at the time occupied the building as a grocery store.

When Mr. Dunn failed in business everything but the cider or vinegar was removed from the building and it was alleged this had been sold later to certain Italian grocers by order of the estate. The value of the vinegar was placed at upward of $250 by William Harris, of Scotch Plains who owned the stuff.

Miss Pardee, a pupil nurse at Muhlenberg Hospital, is convalescing from a recent illness.

Joseph Mercier, of Scotch Plains, who recently underwent an operation at the hospital, returned home today.

Mrs. Harry Davison, of Laramie Road, who recently underwent an operation at the hospital, will return home tomorrow.

John Paoli, of North avenue, expects to leave the hospital soon, where he has been under treatment for several months.

BOHREN TO ERECT 3 STORY BUILDING

Adolph Bohren, owner of the former Hummer property at Somerset street and Linden avenue, has had plans prepared to make a great improvement to that corner. It will materially change the appearance of that locality and expand its business opportunities.

The plans Mr. Bohren now has well underway call for the temporary removal of the small frame building on the corner to a part of the premises just south. It is now occupied by C. L. Applegate's meat market. On the site fronting on Somerset street there will be erected a modern three-story brick building having two stores on the ground floor and four fine apartments above. When it is completed, Mr. Applegate will take possession of one of them for his market and a pharmacy will be located in the other.

As soon as Mr. Applegate vacates the present frame structure it will be demolished, after which the large house on the property, now facing Somerset street, will be swung around to the rear of the lot so as to front on Linden avenue. This will leave quite a frontage on Somerset street suitable for business building and it is probable that Mr. Bohren will improve it in course of time.

The plans for the corner building are practically complete and the work of erection is to commence very soon. When completed it will be a distinct ornament to that part of the borough's principal thoroughfare.

Number 3
THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

CIVIL WAR RELICS IN THE COURT HOUSE

One of the finest collections of relics of the Civil War, both Confederate and Union, in the northern part of the State, rests at present in two cases in the rotunda of the Union County Courthouse at Elizabeth. It is visited daily by a number of visitors, and it is no common sight to see a group of strangers and residents of the city clustered about the cases.

A large part of the collection is the property of General J. Madison Drake, and is merely lent to the county, but a number of the relics were gifts from residents who picked them up on Southern battlefields. One that attracts much attention is a ring carved from the thigh bone of a soldier who fell on the battlefield during a conflict in the Cicil War. It is a beautiful piece of carving and was received by the county from a chaplain of a Union regiment. In his letter accompanying the gift he stated that the relic had been given him by the soldier who had done the carving and who had taken the bone from a skeleton on one of the battlefields.

A handsome pistol holster, formerly the property of Colonel J. J. Cladek, of Plainfield, who used it during the Civil War and who a few years ago presented it to the county, occupies a prominent place in one of the cases. Another relic from a well-known citizen of the county is a canteen used all during the war by Peter Weaver, a constable at the county jail. A photograph of Major Rufus King, a noted Elizabethan who made a fine record during the war, stands next to a picture of the noted Drake Zouaves. A Confederate pocketknife, made very ingeniously from an exploded cartridge, with a rude blade attached, shows how the soldiers filled any need for utensils it was impossible to purchase. Other articles of the same kind are a spoon and fork, made from a small shell flattened out, and an inkstand, made from the lower half of a shell.

A relic in the case which it is impossible to date with accuracy, is a pistol holster used during the War of 1812 by General Winfield Scott. Other relics are a British cannon ball, dug up in the yard when the foundation for the new Courthouse was being built and a number of sword blades supposed to have been used by officers in the Revolutionary War. A knapsack carried by a soldier from this city lies near a number of Confederate bayonets, picked up on the same battlefield.

A silk battle flag, presented to the soldiers of the Cherokee Confederate Battery by the women of Rome, Georgia, lines the side of one of the cases. It was taken, according to the inscription, by Union troops at Chancellorsville. It is beautiful and must have taken several weeks in the making.

An Indian slungshot, taken by a soldier in the West, after the Civil War, from one of the band accompanying Geronimo, the famous Indian chief, is one of the most interesting relics in the case. It is a beautiful specimen of bead work. In the case also is a hammer used at Libbey Prison at Andersonville, by two Union soldiers in an attempt to escape. It is said they were caught when almost free and afterward shot as a warning to their comrades.

A shoe from the horse ridden in the early part of the war by General "Stonewall" Jackson, a rosette from General Grant's catafalque and a pair of spurs from an officer on General Forrest's staff, lie together in the centre of the case on the right side of the rotunda.

Around the sides and bottom of both cases are a number of unmarked caps, sword blades, shells and cartridges.

The backs of the cases are covered with two flags made by the women of this city and presented to regiments leaving for the war. Both of them are torn and have shot marks.

Westfield, March 27.—The fight of twenty years' standing to get former Councilman Charles F. W. Wittke, the veteran newsdealer of the town, away from the eastbound station of the Central Railroad is to be renewed by the Union News Company, which is building a large display stand upon the station at about the exact spot Newsdealer Wittke had stood to serve his many customers for years. Each time the news company has tried to get Wittke away from the station he has returned with his bundle of morning papers and the old commuters have stuck to him. The new newsstand is being alongside the stairway leading to the eastbound platform.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

Lillian Russell, who has not been seen in Plainfield for two or three seasons, will be the attraction at Plainfield theatre, tomorrow night. Miss Russell is appearing this year in a comedy of society manners called "In Search of a Sinner." It was written for her especial use by Charlotte Thompson and produced upon an elaborate scale by Joseph Brooks, who has directed the fair Lillian's tours since she deserted musical work for straight comedy.

This season "McFadden's Flats," destined to enjoy the most prosperous year it has ever had. The enduring farce, which has outlived and outraced all of its competitors, will have an entirely new dress, new features, surprisess and music. It has been rewritten, reconstructed and rejuvenated and will be presented for the first time in its new form at Plainfield theatre this week Thursday, matinee and night.

Charles Frohman will present Ethel Barrymore at the Plainfield theatre, Saturday night, April 1, when the actress will be seen in a double bill by James Matthew Barrie "Alice-Sit-By-The-Fire" and the remarkable play "The Twelve Pound Look." Miss Barrymore is the most popular of the younger set of actresses on the American stage and through her great ability and many talents has won an immense following. In the double bill she has opportunity to show her powers as an actress to excellent and pleasing advantage.

RENO DIVORCE DECREE FOR ELIZABETH WOMAN.

Reno, Nev., March 27.—Charging that her husband's cruel and brutal treatment had ruined her health, Mrs. Lillian de Peyster Pulsford, Thursday, in the District Court, was awarded a decree of divorce from John Arthur Pulsford, said to be a general insurance agent for New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. She testified that they were married at Elizabeth, N. J., on April 15, 1896, and that her husband, who is an insurance agent, did not support her from the day of their marriage. She further testified that he was extremely jealous and on more than one occasion threatened her life for allowing her friends to visit her.

One night, while she was in a parlor talking to a woman friend, she says, he entered and, flourishing a gun, told her friend to get out.

On one occasion, the petitioner declared, Pulsford arose from the dinner table, secured a revolver and told her that he was going out to find a mutual friend of theirs and shoot him. He gave as his reason that Mrs. Pulsford liked this friend too well. He left the house and during his absence Mrs. Pulsford stated that she hid in a closet. She later secured possession of the revolver. The husband then got another one and told her that he was going to shoot her. He said that it was a seven-shooter and that he intended to shoot every one of the seven bullets into her body.

These and other sensational allegations secured for Mrs. Pulsford her decree and the right to resume her maiden name, Lillian de Peyster Post. Her father is a clergyman of Elizabeth, N. J.

Miss Caroline Haviland, daughter of the late Edward Haviland, of East Second street, leaves tomorrow for Brooklyn, where she will visit her aunt, Mrs. Aaron Field, 106 Columbia Heights.

STAGE ANECDOTES

The London Debut of Edmund Kean, the Great Tragedian.

A SUCCESS AND ITS PATHOS.

The Tearful Meeting With His Wife After His Triumph on the Boards. Snubbing a Noble Lord—An English Critic on Edwin Forrest's Macbeth.

Edmund Kean's London debut was made in 1814, at a time when his financial affairs were at a very low ebb. With his wife and one child he was lodging in an attic. His reception as Shylock was most encouraging and flattering. In an almost frenzied ecstasy he rushed through the wet to his humble lodging, sprang up the stairs and threw open the door. His wife ran to meet him. No words were required—his radiant countenance told all—and they mingled together the first tears of true happiness they had as yet experienced. He told her of his proud achievement and in a burst of exultation exclaimed, "Mary, you shall ride in your carriage, and Charley, my boy"—taking the child from the cradle and kissing him—"you shall go to Eton and"—a sad reminiscence crossed his mind, his joy was overshadowed and he murmured in broken accents, "Oh, that Howard (his dead child) had lived to see it!—but he is better where he is."

On the night of Edmund's first appearance as Richard a group of idle actors in the greenroom were discussing his merits in anything but a liberal spirit. "I understand," said one, with an elaborate sneer, "that he is an admirable harlequin." Bannister entered at that moment, overheard the remark and retorted, "I am certain of that, for he has jumped over all our heads."

It seems that the great tragedian, Edmund Kean, and Charles Incledon, the popular singer, were one day walking in Bond street when they met Lord Essex, who bowed coldly to Kean, though they were on terms of intimate friendship.

The next day Kean found a note at the theater from my lord desiring him to call at his house. When there the nobleman said to the tragedian, "My dear Kean, you will pardon me. You know how greatly I admire your genius, but I was surprised yesterday to see you in company of that singing man, Incledon." "My lord," said Kean with flashing eye. "Pray don't excite yourself, now, my dear Kean," interrupted my lord, "but the respect, I may say reverence, I have for your wonderful genius prompts me to speak thus." "Lord Essex," cried Kean, drawing himself up and casting a withering glance at his noble patron, "twelve years ago my family were in want of bread and Charles Incledon, my friend, supplied the means to procure it, and when Edmund Kean forgets his friends may God forget him." And from that hour the two men never exchanged courtesies.

Kean, from early manhood, had an internal complaint, for which he had always been his own physician and prescribed that sovereign balm called "brandy," from which it generally found relief, and at least it always proved an alternative. While traveling from London to Belfast, on quitting the coach at Donegal Arms, he missed his sovereign balm and he called out to the Irish waiter to search the lately abdicated vehicular conveyance as he had left his pocket pistol behind. "The devil a pistol can I find," cried the searching Hibernian, "or anything else but this," producing the leather covered charm. "Why, that's it, you blockhead," exclaimed Kean, suiting the action to the word and tasting to be convinced. Pat scented the cordial and, laughing, cried: "Do you call that a pistol, sir? Why, then, faith, though I'm a peaceable man, I wouldn't mind standing a shot or two of that pistol myself."

When Edwin Forrest went to London he was received in anything but a cordial way. One critic wrote:

"Our old friend Mr. Forrest afforded great amusement to the public by his performance of Macbeth on Friday at the Princess. Indeed, our best comic actors do not often excite so great a quantity of mirth. The change from an inaudible murmur to a thunder of sound was enormous, but the grand feature was the combat in which he stood scraping his sword against that of Macduff. We were at a loss to know what this gesture meant until an enlightened critic in the gallery shouted out, 'That's right, sharpen it!'"

A good story is being told at the expense of a certain local theater whose "Standing Room Only" notice is no longer needed. One night after the curtain was rung up a small boy was discovered in front of the box office. The manager of the theater went to the lad and kindly asked him what the trouble was. "I want my money back," sobbed the boy in answer to the query. In surprise the manager asked his reason for such a request. "Because—because I'm afraid to sit up in the gallery all alone!" he wailed. His money was returned.—Franklin Barry in St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Mere Trifle.

The young lady had won the philopena. "Well," said the gentleman who had lost, "I've lost; what shall I give you?" "Your photograph, nothing but your photograph," she answered, "in a pretty little gold mounting set in a gold bracelet, with a sprinkling of emeralds and just one solitaire—one only, mind you—no more!"

Habit is the deepest law of human nature.—Carlyle.

PEAFOWL ETIQUETTE.

The Hen's Formal Introduction of Her Brood to the World.

For bringing up their families peahens are a model to every other feathered fowl in existence. The nest is usually made of a quantity of dry sticks, and when fairly set and on it the difficulty is to find out where the hen is. So beautifully does the ash gray plumage assimilate with the surroundings that it is often possible to tumble over the nest before recognizing it. In this nest are laid from three to four large whitish eggs about the size of those laid by the common domestic goose.

When the chicks are hatched out they are the most delightful little brown birds imaginable. The color is a rich deep brown, and they much resemble young pheasants both in size and in coloring. Many people have often laughed at the curious etiquette noticeable in the behavior of bees toward their queen. But the peafowl etiquette in introducing young chicks to their owner is at least as curious. As soon as the chicks are able to walk the mother marshals them in a procession, and, leading herself, she stalks to the place where she and the others are generally fed. Having formally introduced her brood, she takes them back to the nest, and they are not seen any more for some weeks. The hen will come and be fed, but the chicks are supposed to remain in retreat till they are grown to the size of spring chickens, when they come out and join the rest of the fowls and learn to feed for themselves.—Country Home.

ELECTRIC MILK.

That Is the Name That Was Once Given to Rubber.

M. de la Condamine, a French savant, was traveling in 1743 in Ecuador with an expedition sent out to measure a degree of the meridian for scientific purposes. He kept a journal, and the following entry is dated July 11:

In the forests of Quito there flows a kind of resin which is called "cahuchu." When fresh it can be molded into any form. It is impervious to rain.

He further describes how the natives used it for making a special kind of syringe, and in April, 1745, when he had returned from his journey, he presented a sample of "cahuchu" to the Academy of Sciences in Paris. The French word for rubber—caoutchouc—is simply a corruption of this Indian name.

La Condamine treated the product as a mere vegetable curiosity. It was Fresneau, a French engineer, who first studied and utilized the substance. He embarked for Guiana with a model of the fruit and a sketch of the leaf. He rowed along the rivers, offered the natives drink and music and when he had assured himself of their friendship by these and other gifts showed his patterns and asked them to indicate the plant. His efforts were finally successful, and he obtained enough rubber to make a pair of boots, which he presented to M. de Maurepas, who went to court in them. The "electric milk," as it was termed, thus made its first entry into the royal presence.—London Family Herald.

A Friendly Penguin.

I outbid a friend for a penguin, which became an interesting pet. The friend wanted the bird for its skin. On board ship the bird soon got accustomed to its surroundings and found that the cook was one to keep on good terms with, and it haunted the galley, getting many tidbits. It was always in attendance when the market boat came alongside in the morning and followed the steward as he carried the day's provisions aft. Strange to say, it developed a great liking for lettuce, although its natural food is fish, and another curious trait was that it would never pick up food from the deck or out of water, but would always take it ravenously from the hand. It behaved like a child and would make a whining sound as if begging to be lifted up and would cuddle down and appear to be quite happy when being nursed.—Scotsman.

Mosaic Work.

The origin of Mosaic work is unknown. We may be sure, however, that it began among some oriental people. It had attained to great excellence in Greece in the time of Alexander and his successors. The Romans also excelled in Mosaic work, as is shown by the many preserved specimens today to be seen in the museums. The art was revived in Italy by Giotto, Cimebue and others and from Italy made its way into the other European countries. Some of the achievements of the Mosaic works of the best Italian period are little less than miraculous.—New York American.

Grim Recollections.

"Now that you are famous, Mr. Rimer, we propose to place a tablet on your former home."

"Well?"

"What would you wish us to say?"

"You might say that I was ejected for nonpayment of rent," replied the somewhat embittered bard.—Washington Herald.

Widely Separated.

"Are you related to Barney O'Brien?" Thomas O'Brien was once asked.

"Very distantly," replied Thomas. "I was me mother's first child; Barney was the sivinteenth!"

The Diva's Ruby

By F. Marion Crawford

Author of "Saracinesca," "Arethusa," etc.

Illustrations by A. Weil

Copyright, 1907, by F. Marion Crawford.

Lady Maude was thinking of these things as she disappeared from Griggs' sight, for she was a little afraid that she had made trouble. Ten days had passed since she had last written to Rufus Van Torp, and she had told him, amongst other things, that Mme. de Cordova and Logotheti were engaged to be married, adding that it seemed to her one of the most ill-assorted matches of the season, and that her friend the singer was sure to be miserable herself and to make her husband perfectly wretched, though he was a very good sort in his way and she liked him. There had been no reason why she should not write the news to Mr. Van Torp, even though it was not public property yet, for he was her intimate friend, and she knew him to be as reticent as all doctors ought to be and as some solicitors' clerks are. She had asked him not to tell any one till he heard of the engagement from some one else.

He had not spoken of it, but something else had happened. He had cabled to Lady Maud that he was coming back to England by the next steamer. He often came out and went back suddenly two or three times at short intervals, and then stayed away for many months, but Lady Maud thought there could not be much doubt as to his reason for coming now. She knew well enough that he had tried to persuade the prima donna to marry him during the previous winter, and that if his passion for her had not shown itself much of late, this was due to other causes, chiefly to the persecution of which he had rid himself just before he went to America, but to some extent also to the fact that Margaret had not seemed inclined to accept any one else.

Lady Maud, who knew the man better than he knew himself, inwardly compared him to a volcano, quiescent just now, so far as Margaret was concerned, but ready to break out at any moment with unexpected and destructive energy.

Margaret herself, who had known Logotheti for years, and had seen him in his most dangerous moods as well as in his best moments, would have thought a similar comparison with an elemental force quite as truly descriptive of him, if it had occurred to her. The enterprising Greek had really attempted to carry her off by force on the night of the final rehearsal before her first appearance on the stage, and had only been thwarted because a royal rival had caused him to be locked up, as if by mistake, in order to carry her off himself; in which he also had failed most ridiculously, thanks to the young singer's friend, the celebrated Mme. Bonanni. That was a very amusing story. But on another occasion Margaret had found herself shut up with her oriental adorer in a room from which she could not escape, and he had quite lost his head; and if she had not been the woman she was, she would have fared ill. After that he had behaved more like an ordinary human being, and she had allowed the natural attraction he had for her to draw her gradually to a promise of marriage; and now she talked to Lady Maud about her gown, but she still put off naming a day for the wedding, in spite of Logotheti's growing impatience.

This was the situation when the London season broke up and Mr. Van Torp landed at Southampton from an ocean greyhound that had covered the distance from New York in 5 days 12 hours and 37 minutes, which will doubtless seem very slow traveling if any one takes the trouble to read this tale 20 years hence, though the passengers were pleased because it was not much under the record time for steamers coming east.

Five hours after he landed Van Torp entered Lady Maud's drawing room in the little house in Charles street, Berkeley Square, where she had lived with the departed Leven from the time when he had been attached to the Russian embassy till he had last gone away. She was giving it up now, and it was already half dismantled. It was to see Van Torp that she was in town in the middle of August, instead of with her father at Craythew or with friends in Scotland.

London was as hot as it could be, which means that a New Yorker would have found it chilly and an Italian delightfully cool; but the Londoners were sweltering when Van Torp arrived, and were talking of the oppressive atmosphere and the smell of the pavement, not at all realizing how blessed they were.

The American entered and stood still a moment to have a good look at Lady Maud. He was a middle-sized, rather thick-set man, with rude hands, sandy hair, an over-developed jaw, and sharp blue eyes that sometimes fixed themselves in a disagreeable way when he was speaking—eyes that had looked into the barrel of another man's revolver once or twice without wavering, hands that had caught and saddled and bridled many an unridden colt in the plains, a mouth like a carpet-bag when it opened, like a closed vice when it was shut. He was not a handsome man, Mr. Rufus Van Torp, nor one with whom any one short of a prize-fighter would meddle, nor one to haunt the dreams of sweet 16. It was not for his face that Lady Maud, good and beautiful, liked him better than any one in the world, except her own father, and believed in him and trusted him, and it was assuredly not for his money. The beggar did not live who would dare to ask him for a penny after one look at his face, and there were not many men on either side of the Atlantic who would have looked forward to any sort of contest with him without grave misgivings.

"Well," he said, advancing the last step after that momentary pause, and taking the white hand in both his own, "how have you been? Fair to middling? About that? Well—I'm glad to see you, gladder than a sitting hen at sunrise!"

was uppermost on hers, and her voice rippled with happiness.

"If you had only said a lark instead of a hen, Rufus!" she laughed.

"We could get along a lot better without larks than without hens," answered her friend philosophically. "But I'll make it a nightingale next time, if I can remember, or a bald eagle, or any bird that strikes you as cheerful."

The terrible mouth had relaxed almost to gentleness, and the fierce blue eyes were suddenly kind as they looked into the woman's face. She led him to an old-fashioned sofa, their hands parted, and they sat down side by side.

"Cheerful," he said, in a tone of reflection. "Yes, I'm feeling pretty cheerful, and it's all over and settled."

"Do you mean the trouble you were in last spring?"

"N—no—not that, though it wasn't as funny as a Sunday school treat while it lasted, and I was thankful when it was through. It's another matter altogether that I'm cheerful about—besides seeing you, my dear. I've done it, Maud. I've done it at last."

"What?"

"I've sold my interest in the Trust. It won't be made known for some time, so don't talk about it, please. But it's settled and done, and I've got the money."

"You have sold the Nickel Trust?" Lady Maud's lips remained parted in surprise.

"And I've bought you a little present with the proceeds," he answered, putting his large thumb and finger into the pocket of his white waistcoat. "It's only a funny little bit of glass I picked up," he continued, producing a small twist of stiff writing paper. "You needn't think it's so very fine! But it's a pretty color, and when you're out of mourning I daresay you'll make a hatpin of it. I like handsome hatpins myself, you know."

He had untwisted the paper while speaking, it lay open in the palm of his hand, and Lady Maud saw a stone of the size of an ordinary hazel nut, very perfectly cut, and of that wonderful transparent red color which is known as "pigeon's blood," and which it is almost impossible to describe. Sunlight shining through Persian rose-leaf sherbet upon white silk makes a little patch of color that is perhaps more like it than any other shade of red, but not many Europeans have ever seen that, and it is a good deal easier to go and look at a pigeon's blood ruby in a jeweler's window.

"What a beautiful color!" exclaimed Lady Maud innocently, after a moment. "I didn't know they imitated rubies so well, though, of course, I know nothing about it. If it were not an impossibility, I should take it for a real one."

"So should I," assented Mr. Van Torp quietly. "It'll make a pretty hatpin anyway. Shall I have it mounted for you?"

"Thanks, awfully, but I think I should like to keep it as it is for a little while. It's such a lovely color, just as it is. Thank you so much! Do tell me where you got it."

"Oh, well, there was a sort of a traveler came to New York the other day selling them what they call privately. I guess he must be a Russian or something, for he has a kind of an off-look of your husband, only he wears a beard and an eyeglass. It must be about the eyes. Maybe the forehead, too. He'll most likely turn up in London one of these days to sell this invention, or whatever it is."

Lady Maud said nothing to this, but she took the stone from his hand, looked at it some time with evident admiration, and then set it down on its bit of paper, upon a little table by the end of the sofa.

"If I were you, I wouldn't leave it around much," observed Mr. Van Torp carelessly. "Somebody might take a fancy to it. The color's attractive, you see, and it looks like real."

"Oh, I'll be very careful of it, never fear! I can't tell you how much I like it!" She twisted it up tightly in its bit of paper, rose to her feet, and put it away in her writing table.

"It'll be a sort of souvenir of the old Nickel Trust," said her friend, watching her with satisfaction.

"Have you really sold out all your interest in it?" she asked, sitting down again; and now that she returned to the question her tone showed that she had not yet recovered from her astonishment.

"That's what I've done. I always told you I would, when I was ready. Why do you look so surprised? Would you rather I hadn't?"

Lady Maud shook her head and her voice rippled deliciously as she answered:

MUCH WORK AHEAD FOR LEGISLATORS

Although the Legislature will begin its twelfth week tonight and in all probability will put in one of the busiest weeks of the present season, it is not believed final adjournment will come for three or four weeks. In the time that remains the most important work is to be completed.

All of the big business, including the Geran election bill, public utilities, local option, employers' liability and the corrupt practices measure, are yet to be disposed of.

The first and apparently the most important of these, in the public mind at least, is the Geran bill, embodying Governor Wilson's ideas in matter of election reforms. The measure has passed the House of Assembly and is considered sure of passage in the Senate, although possibly with modifications.

Employers' liability is another important subject, settlement of which is still far from accomplished. The bill introduced by Senator Edge has received the approval of the upper branch, but still has to fight its way through the House. While it is said to have the Governor's support in its present form, it is believed a strong effort will be made to have it more fully comply with the demands of labor. A decision by the New York Court of Appeals, during the last week, calls attention to the fact that the Edge measure whether modified or not is not likely to accomplish what the labor organizations desire in the matter of employers' liability legislation. The Edge bill does not go nearly as far as the New York law in making employers liable.

The Ford bill, which was drawn to meet the demands of labor organizations, and Assemblyman Walsh's bill, are both more in favor of the employes, but as matters now stand the Edge bill is the only one appearing to have a chance of passing.

The Simpson corrupt practices bill has gotten as far as the Senate Committee on Elections. The bill with Governor Wilson's support is likely to become a law, but not without considerable pruning by the Republican Senate.

The bills to confer rate making power on public utility corporations are still pending, although the Senate committee substitute for the bills of Senators Gaunt, Osborne and Gebhardt has reached the third reading and will no doubt pass the Senate this week. This is not the bill Governor Wilson wants. He wants the Egan House bill, but it is probably the only bill to which the Senate will consent. It protects in office to the ends of their terms the present Public Utility Commissioners, while the Egan bill creates a new commission to be named at once by Governor Wilson.

Local option will probably come up for final action in the Senate tonight.

Mrs. Julien S. Dean, accompanied by her son and daughter, of Wilmette, a suburb of Chicago, are visiting Mrs. Dean's father, Dr. H. H. Lowrie, of Park avenue.

BERKELEY HEIGHTS' IDEAL SETTLEMENT

What many have termed a modern Utopia exists at Berkeley Heights and is the outcome of the labor of Bolton Hall, whose ideas, closely associated with those of Henry George, brings the single tax question to the point of demonstration.

A score of families have taken up their residence on the plots of ground called "Free Acres" and apparently find the solution to the problem of life in their community ideas. The tract of land, which comprises about sixty acres, is being rapidly taken up by those who have found the difficulties of living altogether too much for them to overcome in the big cities, and have founded a colony where perpetual peace seems to reign and where for a nominal sum per year each holder of a quarter section may live and prosper.

Several years ago Mr. Hall conceived the idea which is now being carried out and the results attained have been successful in so far as they relate to actual material benefit to those who have taken up the plan. It was an old abandoned farm, but the improvements initiated by the new colonists have restored the beauty of the landscape to say nothing of making the place one which will fulfill the requirements of the inhabitants.

One part of the farm, consisting of fifteen acres, has been laid out in pleasure grounds where outdoor sports may be indulged in. Baseball, tennis, basketball courts and other athletic amusements are provided for the colonists. Besides this, following the social life of the Delaware Eden (Arden), weekly campfires and theatrical entertainments are provided.

The rules governing the new community are not in any sense stringent and in fact appeal to the average good-government advocate.

JACK JOHNSON LOCKED UP.

Sentenced to Serve Twenty-five Days for Speeding.

San Francisco, March 27.—Jack Johnson, champion heavyweight pugilist, was sentenced by Acting Police Treadwell to serve twenty-five days in the county jail on a charge of exceeding the automobile speed limit. Johnson pleaded guilty to the charge on Thursday.

Soon after sentence was passed on the colored pugilist he was locked up in the city prison, and following the usual procedure his valuables were taken from him. His attorney immediately began a search for some superior judge who would issue a writ of habeas corpus to prevent Johnson being taken to the county jail.

AUTO KILLS BOY, DRIVER IS MOBBED

Perth Amboy, March 27.—Peter Salon, the five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Solan, of 801 Valley place, was struck and instantly killed about dusk Saturday evening by a Cole car owned by the Van Sickles Garage Company and driven by Henry Timmins, of Commerce street. A small riot followed the accident and at one time it looked bad for the driver.

Returning home to this city Timmins, in company with M. Balfar, Thomas Crozier and William Delmar, all of this city, were coming down State street at a moderate rate of speed, and when they reached Pulaski avenue young Solan stepped directly in front of the machine and was knocked down and the car ran over his body. At once a large crowd of foreigners collected and at the sight of the dead body of the youth some one in the crowd caught hold of the driver of the car and dragged him into the saloon of Frank Nikodem, in State street, where they were deliberating what they should do to the man who had driven the machine.

At this time Roundsman John Morris and Patrolman William Harding rushed to the scene and took Timmins from the howling mob a prisoner. So great was the hatred against the man and the machine that the back tires were deliberately cut into shreds, a lamp stolen and the license number torn off.

Dr. M. S. Meinzer, the city physician, was called, but the boy had been killed outright, his skull being crushed. He in turn notified Coroner Fred Garretson, of High street, who took the body to his morgue and questioned all of those who witnessed the accident. The coroner after a careful investigation exonerated Timmins, as all who saw it say that it was the fault of the child. The accident happened in the northern section of the city, which is mainly populated by foreigners.

M'MAHON TELLS OF POWER OF PRAYER

Tim McMahon thinks it was prayer that lifted the blacklist.

"Every once in awhile," said Tim, "I read about what people call coincidences. I don't take much stock in that; to my mind there is a reason for everything. I know some fellow is going to say that this is a coincidence, what I am about to tell, but I don't think so.

"Of course, everybody who reads the papers know about the burning of Mount St. Mary's College at Plainfield, N. J. Jack Barrett McMahon, 8 years of age, for some time had been a pupil there. I went over to Plainfield and got up a vaudeville show which was given in the Plainfield Theatre for the benefit of Mount St. Mary's College. I made a straight charge of two dollars a seat. On the bill in the order named were Roberts, Hayes & Roberts, Charles J. Ross, Caulfield & Driver, McMahon & Chappelle, Hill & Sylviani, Maggie Cline, the Sylvester Trio and Mathilde Bruguiere, in operatic selections.

"The benefit did well. I turned over $1,000. When I gave this to the Mother Superior she said words of thanks would not express how they felt, but that the Sisters would pray for me. The next day the blacklist was lifted. The prayers of the Catholic Church did it."—New York Morning Telegraph.

WRIGHT IS AFTER THE SHRIEVALTY JOB

Under-Sheriff William H. Wright, of Rahway, has announced himself as Republican candidate to succeed Sheriff Robert J. Kirkland in Union County. Mr. Wright has held his present official position since the election of Sheriff Kirkland in November, 1908. Sheriff Kirkland will give Mr. Wright his support in the coming campaign, as Mr. Wright withdrew from the primary contest in favor of Sheriff Kirkland in 1908, that being the second time that he withdrew and each time worked loyally for the success of the ticket. Now his friends declare that the nomination rightfully belongs to him.

Mr. Wright is one of the best known men in Union county. He is president of the Rahway Republican Club, and since he assumed the leadership in the club has made the organization one of the strongest in the State. When Mr. Wright first assumed the office as its president the club had seventy members and was in debt over $1,000. Today the club has over 400 members and is entirely free of debt. Previous to accepting the office of under-sheriff Mr. Wright was for more than twenty years in the postoffice in this city, and during his administration as assistant postmaster brought the office up to an exceedingly high state of efficiency.

Mr. Wright is forty-eight years of age, a son of Chief of Police George Wright. He has lived the greater part of his life in Rahway. He is a prominent member of Rahway Lodge No. 1075, of Elks, and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

KENNEL CLUB PLANS FOR ITS BENCH SHOW

At the meeting of the Plainfield Kennel Club, held in Truell Hall on Saturday evening, twenty members were present and plans for the annual show, which is to be held on June 17, were made. It is promised that the exhibition will surpass any of its predecessors and that ample accommodations will be prepared for a large attendance.

Edmund L. Mackenzie presided at the meeting and the reports of the officers showed the club to be in splendid condition. Exhibitors from the Eastern and Middle Western States will be prominent ones in the show and local fanciers will have special classes designed for them so that they will not have to compete with national champions.

The confusion resulting from an overcrowded ring and other discomforts experienced at the last meeting will not hamper the show this year. A military band will discourse the music and it is expected that more than a thousand entries will be received for the show. Many of them are in sight now.

The features will be the exhibition of nearly all the national champions in the various classes, some noted dogs being entered in competition for the blue ribbons. A meeting will be held within the next ten days at which the final arrangements for the show will be made.

These are the officers of the club: President, Edmund L. Mackenzie; vice president, Rupert W. K. Anderson; secretary, Edward H. Hobbie; treasurer, E. F. Feickert. The above, with A. G. Hooley, form the Board of Governors.

SABBATH SCHOOL HAS YEARLY MEETING

The annual meeting of the Sabbath-school of the Seventh-Day Baptist church was held in the Sabbath-school rooms, last night, for the purpose of electing officers and hearing of reports. The attendance was quite large and much interest was evinced.

The meeting was called to order by Superintendent O. S. Rogers and W. C. Hubbard was made chairman and Nathan Wardner secretary. Prayer was offered by Pastor Shaw.

The treasurer's report for the past year showed the finances to be in excellent condition. The customary donations to local institutions were made, among them the Day Nursery, Muhlenberg Hospital, the Loyal Temperance Legion, the Children's Home and the State Primary Association. The membership of the school was reported to be 137.

In the election of officers, Superintendent Rogers tendered his resignation and it was received with expressions of regret. He has held the position for the past seven years and his efficient services have meant much to the department. It was the unanimous wish of the school that W. C. Hubbard be elected to succeed him but the latter was not in a position at the time to accept. He took the nomination under advisement, however, and will give his decision later.

The officers elected were the following: Assistant superintendents, Dr. H. M. Maxson and Asa Randolph; secretary, Nathan Wardner; treasurer, Roy Titsworth; librarian, Miss Nettie Stillman; pianist, Miss Eva Rogers; chorister, Frank Langworthy; auditors, Mrs. O. S. Rogers and Mrs. Asa Randolph.

TO BUILD TROLLEY UNDER NEW CHARTER.

Morristown, March 27.—That the Morris County Traction Company will not be delayed in building its trolley line between Morristown and Madison, despite the opposition of wealthy residents of the section traversed, is evident from the filings in the secretary of State's office at Trenton of a certificate of incorporation of the Morris Railroad Company.

This road is to locate a route for a steam railroad between Morris street, Morristown, and Danforth road, Florham Park, a distance of three miles. This road will be leased to the trolley company.

The incorporators are A. Gross MacConnell, chairman of the right-of-way committee; Carl V. Vogt, of the company's counsel; George G. Todd, foreman of the engineering department; Otto G. Schultz, secretary; George A. Gilfillin, consulting engineer, and John L. Desch, chief engineer.

Elmer King, counsel for the new company, has filed the route at Trenton and also put up the $6,000 required by law. When the trolley company attempted to obtain rights of way between Morristown and Madison it met with opposition from Otto H. Kahn, Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombly, the Morris County Golf Club, Dr. F. Landon Humphries and others. They fought condemnation proceedings in the courts, and the latest move by the trolley company is to defeat their opponents' court proceedings.

The annual offering at the Chescent Avenue church for foreign missions amounted to $1,300. The amount desired is $2,200.

HUNT FOR HIS KIN

Providence R. I., Elks Want Search Made for John Graham's Relatives.

SUPPOSED TO RESIDE HERE.

No response having come from the advertised notice to relatives of John Graham, who died in the Providence Hospital, Providence, R. I., on Thursday, March 23, E. F. Fuller, a photographer of that city, for whom Graham worked, has written to Joseph Noonan, exalted ruler of the local lodge of Elks, asking that he make a final effort to locate Graham's relatives.

Mr. Fuller says that Graham was born at Pittsburg, Pa., and that he had a sister in Allegheny City, whose name was Mrs. Nancy Pervinus. There were two daughters of the old photographer presumably living in this city, but their names could not be learned by the writer of the letter. It is known that Graham for twenty years was in the employ of a Mr. Stead, a commercial photographer of New York, and was with him until about four years ago.

Mr. Fuller writes that the body of Graham has been embalmed by a Providence undertaker, an Elk, and unless the relatives claim the remains it will necessarily have to be buried in potter's field and that the interment will take place on Thursday next.

Graham was not affiliated with any fraternal order so far as could be ascertained and no papers indicating that he carried insurance have been found among his scanty effects. He was evidently of a good family and had lived a careful life. His death was caused by a stroke of paralysis.

LOCAL ENDEAVORERS TO BE REPRESENTED

There was a large attendance at the special congress of the Plainfield Christian Endeavor Union held last evening in Y. M. C. A. Hall. Frank Stewart, president of the union, presided and at his suggestion it was unanimously decided to discontinue the awarding of the pennant banner at the regular mass meetings and it was decided that the local union would pay the travelling expenses and entrance fee to the International C. E. convention which is to be held this year at Atlantic City, of a delegation to be selected from the society that has the highest percentage of active and associate members present at the next mass meeting to be held on May 4 next.

Three changes in the constitution were sugegsted which will be put before the next congress—first, providing that the mass meeting all be in charge of the executive committee instead of the other committees as heretofore; second, providilng for the formation of a temperance committee of the local union; third, providing for changing the number necessary for a quorum from 13 to 7.

Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson, president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, was a guest at the meeting and invited the members to attend a meeting to be held in the Seventh Day Baptist church on Tuesday, April 18, at which Miss Elizabeth Goodwin, of Greenwich, Burlington county, State Secretary of the Young Peoples' branch of the W. C. T. U., will deliver an address.

BUY ANOTHER TEAM FOR FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The team of greys purchased by W. W. Wilson, of the Councilmanic fire committee, of L. F. Hersh and Brother, of Elizabeth, will be delivered to the Netherwood fire house tomorrow, the Elizabeth firm having accepted the city's price. Captain Townley, who will have charge of the horses, believe that they will meet every requirement. They are each 16.1 hands and each weighs about 1,500 pounds. They are seasoned horses and so far as known are perfectly sound.

L. F. Hersh and Brother have informed Mr. Wilson that if the team is not satisfactory in any particular they may be returned and the money will be refunded. They informed Mr. Wilson yesterday that they believed the team would just suit the purposes for which they were purchased.

Rev. Dr. Reid to Lecture.

Rev. Dr. Gilbert Reid, of the borough, who for thirty years was a missionary in China, has been invited to give a lecture at the Park Club, Friday night on the subject: "A Plan of International Peace in the Far East." Dr. Reid has made a close study of the subject and is well qualified to speak on it. The public is invited and no admission fee will be charged.

COUNCIL UNANIMOUS AGAINST SATTELS

Joseph Sattels, Mayor G. W. V. Moy's second appointee for the position of overseer-of-the-poor to succeed Alexander D. Ayers, was refused confirmation at an adjourned meeting of the Common Council, last night, as expected. Councilman F. L. Montgomery, who is chairman of the alms committee, moved that the appointment be taken from the table, which was done, and he then moved, as he explained, without prejudice, that the appointment be confirmed. This motion was seconded by Councilman W. W. Wilson.

When the vote was taken, every member present, Councilmen Duncan W. Taylor, W. L. Gloak, Herbert Buxton, F. E. Mygatt, George S. Clay, W. W. Wilson, C. C. Randolph and F. L. Montgomery, voted "no" without any comment. This settles the matter so far as Mr. Sattels is concerned.

TELEPHONE CO. SEEKS DUNELLEN FRANCHISE

The question of granting the New York Telephone Company a franchise to erect poles and string wires in Dunellen for a period of fifty years, was given a public hearing by the Dunellen Council last night. A representative of the company, Mr. McHarg, together with a large number of citiezns were present and there was a lively discussion of the proposed ordinance.

According to the ordinance the company will furnish free three telephones, one for each of the public schools and one for the borough. It was the sense of opinion that the company should give the three telephones for past favors and that the franchise should be for a period of twenty or twenty-five years.

It was also contended that Dunellen subscribers should have a service with Plainfield at local rates. The present charge is ten cents for each call.

The representative said that he would have to take those matters up with the officials of the company and he would be ready to report at the next meeting, April 3, when another public hearing will be held. There is also some talk of imposing another restriction on the company in return for the franchise, that of removing the "limit" in the service, that is, giving subscribers unlimited service as is afforded resident 'phones in this city and elsewhere.

FRANCIS B. O'CONNOR SUDDENLY SUCCUMBS

Francis Burdette O'Connor, aged sixty-two years, a resident of this city about twelve years, died suddenly this morning at his home, 141 East Fifth street, from heart trouble. He was taken ill at 2 o'clock. Dr. T. S. Davis was summoned, but the man's condition was such that he was beyond help. He died about an hour later.

Mr. O'Connor studied medicine for several years and was for a time connected with a medical college in Brooklyn. He never took his degree and never practiced medicine. During his residence in this city he made many friends by his genial disposition and quiet companionable manner. He was a member of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church.

Although his health had not been the best, it was not known that Mr. O'Connor suffered from heart trouble. During the early part of last evening he engaged in a game of checkers with some other boarders at his home and retired about 10 o'clock in his usual good health. Mr. O'Connor is survived by one sister, Mrs. Henry Nicolay, of East Front street. Announcement of funeral will be made later.

WILL INSTITUTE NEW FORESTERS' COURT APRIL 11

The members who are interested in the organization of a new Court of Foresters here, met last night in the law offices of Asa F. Randolph, the Babcock building, and decided upon Tuesday night, April 11, as the date for institution.

The name will not be announced until thattime. The high officials will have charge of the institution. It is expected that at least sixty-five charter members will comprise the original list, judging by the way the applications are coming in at present. The new court will be instituted in Stillman Hall on West Front street.

Mrs. William Milligan, of John street, who recently underwent an operation at the hospital, has returned home.

REPORT OF PROBE

School Investigators Suggest Abolishing State School Superintendent Office.

FOR BOND ISSUE REFORM.

Twenty-nine distinct recommendations are contained in an exhaustive report of sixty-seven pages, which was issued today by the Senate committee to investigate the methods and practices, expenses and disbursements of the public schools. The report is submitted by Joseph Frelinghuysen, William J. Bradley, George S. Silzer, State Senators, and William G. Schauffler, of Lakewood. William H. Morrow and S. St. John McCutchen, assent to all of the recommendations except that of the 25th., and they declare that they consider the State Board efficient, and preferable to the proposed commissioner.

In referring to the State school fund the report goes on to say: "The committee has been unable to find any satisfactory explanation as to why, when the Trustees purchased directly from the Board of Education, were able to find they paid only par, whereas when they purchased from brokers they always paid more than par. Neither has it been able to find any satisfactory explanation as to why so many sales were effected by or in the interest of two brokers."

The second recommendation of the committee, relative to the bond sales, is as follows:

"The trustees of the School Fund should encourage sales directly by school districts so as to save the profit which is usually made by brokers. It should be made their duty to buy directly from school districts whenever possible. When funds for investment amount to $100,000 is should be their duty to advertise in a leading financial paper to the effect that bids will be received at a certain time and place. All bids should be received in sealed envelopes at such time and all should be opened in the presence of the bidders, and forthwith posted so as that each bidder can see every bid."

The twenty-fifth recommendation, from which two of the members of the committee, disent, is as follows:

"The State Board of Education should be abolished. The offices of State Superintendent and Assistant State Superintendent should be abolished. The office of a Commissioner should be selected without regard to whether his place of residence is within or without the State of New Jersey. He should be appointed by the Governor for a term of five years, commencing July 1, 1911, at an annual salary of about $10,000." The Assistant State Superintendent is J. B. Betts, of North Plainfield and the State Superintendent is C. J. Baxter, formerly of North Plainfield.

It will interest the county superintendents to know that the report recommends a clerk for them at $600 a year, and also that the Board of Freeholders in each county should provide an office for him. Last, but most important, that the salary of the county superintendent should be increased to $3,000 a year.

FUNERAL SERVICE OF MISS WALDORF

The funeral services of Miss Ruth Meredeith Waldorf, the fifteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund V. Waldorf, were held at 1:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the late home, 134 Crescent avenue, and was largely attended by relatives and friends, including Miss Waldorf's classmates from the freshman class of the Plainfield High School and her Sunday school class of the Park Avenue Baptist hurch, of which Miss Anna Clark is the teacher.

Rev. Gabriel Reid Maguire, of the Park avenue Baptist church,and Rev. Dr. C. E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian church, were in charge of the services, both offering prayer and making remarks of eulogy concerning the life of the young woman. During the services the Sunday school class sang "Abide With Me," "Some Glad Day," and "Safe in the Arms of Jesus."

Miss Waldorf rested on a bed of choice flowers in an open casket, and there were a great many beautiful floral tributes, there being more than one hundred pieces from relatives and friends. The remains were taken to Elizabeth for interment in the family plot in Evergreen cemetery, Rev. Mr. Maguire accompanying the mourners.

Funeral of I. D. Ten Eyck.

The funeral of Isreal D. Ten Eyck, who died at his home on West Second street, yesterday morning, will be held at Cole's undertaking rooms, Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Burial will be in Evergreen cemetery.

MISS LILLIAN RUSSELL AT THEATRE TONIGHT

Lillian Russell, who is booked for tonight at the Plainfield theatre, is celebrating her thirty-third season behind the footlights this year and in keeping with her general progress in anything she undertakes is meeting with the great hit of her career to date in the Charlotte Thompson comedy, "In Search of a Sinner," a satirical reflection of fashionable life in and near New York, which finds a great measure of its potency in the brilliant enactment of the central character by the famous beauty who is starring in the play.

Lillian Russell began her stage career in one of Tony Pastor's burlesque and travesty productions at his original theatre in New York, when H. S. Sanderson was the manager. Her debut took place in February, 1880. Pastor and Sanderson gave her the stage name, Lillian Russell, her maiden name being Helen Leonard. She stepped from a minor part into a more prominent one her first season and only a few years followed before she was known as the Queen of American comic opera. Then followed her long reign at the Casino and at the head of her own companies in some of the most delightful musical entertainments that memory carries back to those interesting periods of the stage's development.

About ten years ago Miss Russell became the bright particular star of that wonderful force the Weber and Fields management built up and she remained there for seven years. Leaving Weber and Fields, she ventured into a musical version of Sheridan's "The School for Scandal" and so astounded shrewd observers by her acting of the role more than by her vocal triumphs in it that she was deluged with offers to go into straight comedy. Joseph Brooks won her consent to the new trial and under his skillful direction she ventured forth as a comedienne in an English comedy called "The Butterfly." Her success was immediate and she followed it up with two years in "Wildfire" to the most phenominal business ever known by a light comedy of this sort on the American stage. This in turn gave way to "The Widow's Might" and "The First Night" and brings her career as a comedienne up to the present season.

NEW BUILDING CODE PASSES 2ND READING

The proposed building code which the fire and building committee has been working on for several months and which was previously adopted on first reading, was taken up at the adjourned meeting of the Common Council, last night and adopted by sections on second reading, after a few changes were made as suggested by the committee.

The section "penalty and persons liable," was changed, the words "building trade mechanic" being struck out and the words "architect, employer or superintendent" who shall be liable for failure to comply with the provisions of the code, being substituted. This change was made at the request of contractors, for as originally worded arrests might completely tie-up all work.

Paragraph four, section 67, providing that fire escapes erected on buildings shall not extend over four feet beyond the building line, was stricken out entirely for the reason that the State law covers the point.

Another important provision pertains to the setting of coal or gas ranges, specifying that if they are set less than six inches from the wall brick studding shall be provided. If between six and twelve inches metal sheeting shall be used and if over twelve inches no protection will be necessary.

In paragraph four section 114, for "solid brick work, where stud partitions separate frame buildings, the division "studding shall be filled with ⅞ inch material" was substituted.

After several changes were made the code was adopted as a whole on second reading, ordered engrossed and advertised. Several contractors, together with representatives of the electric light and gas departments of the Public Service Corporation were present to take notes. They did not enter into any discussion.

Leichtentritt—Wechsler.

A. Michael Wechsler, of New York city, announces the marriage of his sister, Miss Rose Wechsler, to Phillip Leichtentritt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Meyer Leichtentritt, formerly of West Front street. The wedding took place in New York on Sunday, March 19, and the couple will be at home at 512 West 179th street, New York, April 9 and 16, from 2 to 5 o'clock. Mr. Leichentritt was graduated from the Plainfield High School and later from the Columbia Law School, New York, and is now practicing law in New York city.

CYCLONE HITS EAST

Accompanied by Electrical Disturbances, it Wroughts Heavy Damage.

ITS EFFECT IS SLIGHT HERE.

A heavy storm accompanied by electrical disturbances which at times attained to the proportions of a cyclone, suddenly made itself felt in the Ohio Valley some time yesterday afternoon, traveled eastward over Ohio, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and after nightfall swept out to sea. In its wake remained the wreckage of many buildings and wire lines. Some lives were taken, how many is not known.

While Ohio, Pennsylvania and New Jersey suffered most, it actually was only the heart of the storm which swept over these States. As far south as North Carolina, and in various points of Virginia, the wind cut all wires and probably did much damage. To the north the upper edge of it crossed the lakes, widly whiping up the waters and causing losses at least along the shores. In Manhattan it exhibited itself as an electrical storm accompanied by a heavy downpour of hail.

Though reports of the storm's fury came from points scattered over hundreds of miles of country probably its most remarkable effect was felt at Tacony, a suburb of Philadelphia, twelve miles away from the downtown section, on the shore of the Delaware River. The wind there whipped the small station of the Pennsylvania Railroad from its foundations and hurled it off into the fields. Shelter sheds for freight at the same point were ripped into ribbons of wood and metal, and the signal bridge, which crosses the tracks, was dragged from its fastenings. A signal tower at Tulleytown was unmoored, too, and sent to destruction alongside the tracks.

Heavy freight cars which rested on sidings near the station at Wissinoming, a mile or two nearer Philadelphia, were lifted from the rails and turned over into the ditches. A wrecking train which set out hopefully from Philadelphia to re-establish traffic puffed into the heart of the storm, only to be toppled over beside the other cars.

Traffic to and from Philadelphia on the Pennsylvania system was cut off temporarily.

The storm which passed over this city last night at about 7:30 o'clock, failed to do much damage as was done in other parts of the State, although for a time the wind blew with hurricane force. East Front street seemed to have caught the full force of the blow and there several large panes of glass were broken and signs tossed about with more or less damage to the signs.

When the wind swooped down East Front street the first movable sign it caught was that of the Hertz lace store, which in a second or two was lying out in the gutter. Following on down the street a heavy gust caught the electrically illuminated show case of Drake Business College, which in a twinkling was rendered into fragments. The crash could be heard a block away.

The wind then shitfen for a run up Park avenue, where at the corner of Fourth street it paid its respects to the awning at the entrance to the market of William L. Smalley & Co. The awning was torn from its fastenings and the iron bar crashed through a window, smashing it to bits. With this prank left behind, Brother Boreas pushed his way into Arlington avenue and played hobs with the limbs of trees pruning off limbs that had been left by the prunners.

There must have been a return visit some time during the night for at 1:30 this morning Patrolman McDonald discovered the spitting ends of a trolley feed wire making squirming pyrotechnics in the roadway on Arlington avenue at Ninth street. Patrolman McDonald was not provided with rubber gloves, but possessed much caution. He didn't touch the sputtering wire, just called up police headquarters and notified Captain Frederickson that a bunch of dangerous electric fluid was prancing about the corner. The captain promptly notified the Public Service Company and then they waited the results. At about 3:30 a man showed up who was able to handle the twisted wire, meanwhile two patrolmen were cooling their heels on the sidewalk and preventing the unwary from coming in contract with the dangerous wire.

In the East end of town several window shutters banged their way through brittle glass lights and a chicken house or two turned turtle but so far as could be learned this morning nobody suffered personal injury.

Other parts of the State were not so fortunate. In Burlington fifty or more houses were unroofed, several barns carried away and the brick walls of a factory were blown down.

BEQUEST OF $5,000 TO BE PAID TO CITY

Joseph P. Tate, executor of the estate of Mrs. M. E. Edgerton, in a communication to the Common Council, last night, stated that upon receipt of release, he would turn over to the Playground Commission the bequest of $5,000 left by Mrs. Edgerton for its work. The communication was referred to the finance committee and the release requested will be sent to Mr. Tate.

The directors of the Plainfield Public Library and Reading Room, informed the Council that it would require $7,500 for the coming year, which is the same appropriation as this year. The item was referred to the finance committee to be incorporated in the annual budget.

Residents of Leland avenue complained about the condition of that thoroughfore, asking the Council to make some improvements which they believe they are entitled to considering the taxes paid. This matter was referred to the street committee.

MINSTREL SHOW OF LYDIA CHAPTER

Lydia Chapter, No. 41, Order of the Eastern Star, entertained its members and friends last evening with what was called "A Night in Dixie." The singing of plantation melodies as done by the women members assisted by a few men, came up to the standard of good minstrels and was heartily appreciated and applauded by a large company.

The program: Opening chorus, "Way Down South in Dixie;" recitation, "A Coquette's Conquest," Mrs. Harry Joseph; tableanx, "Old Black Joe," S. B. Joseph; solo, "Mammy Only Lubs Her Baby," Mrs. Robert Giddes; tableaux, "One Cent Short," Alonzo Brokaw and Mrs. H. W. Marshall; solo, Harold Leadbitter; solo, "I'm a Coon," Mrs. Purcell; tableaux, "Shoofly" with Master Bruce Force, three years old as the weilder of the brush; chorus, "My Old Kentucky Home;" solo, "Moonlight Glide," Mrs. Robert Humpston; chorus, "Old Folks at Home;" solo, Mr. Leadbitter; final chorus "The Star Spangled Banner."

Following the entertainment light refreshments were served by a committee of women. The lodge room in the Babcock building was handsomely decorated with American flags loaned for the occasion by A. E. Force.

It was announced last evening that the officers of the grand lodge of the order would visit the lodge in this city on Friday, April 14 next.

MARTINE TO SPEAK AT JR.O.U.A.M.EVENT

Governor Woodrow Wilson will be the principal speaker at the thirty-fifth anniversary banquet of Valley Forge Council, No. 2, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, to be held at Pohlmann's Hall, Jersey City, April 25. The Governor, according to the committee in charge, comprising George K. Meler, Harry S. Lane, J. R. Stamminger, H. C. Ockerman, J. H. Stamminger and Harry Lambert, has accepted the invitation to speak, and he will be accorded a fitting reception. The Jr. O. U. A. M., lent Wilson an almost united support in the November election.

United States Senator James E. Martine, of this city, will be present and will also be accorded a big reception, as the influence of the order was largely exerted to procure his election by the Legislature.

The affair will be a big one in the annals of the order. Councils from all over the State will be represented.

Following the dinner a reception will be held. The committee has made arrangements to accommodate more than 1,500 diners.

Stevens Glee Club Concert.

Arrangements have been made by the Plainfield High School musical club to have the Stevens' Institute Musical Club give one of its popular concerts in the Hight School auditorium, Monday evening, April 10. The club has a membership of 43, including instrumentalists and vocalists, divided into a mandolin club, a glee club and an orchestra.

State R. Rs. Directors.

At a joint session of the Senate and House of the Assemly this noon, Abram Deronde, of Bergen, was elected State Director of Railroads. Senator Prince nominated Joshua Borden for the position. Deronde received 46 votes and Borden 28 votes.

Miss Elsie Stanley, of South avenue, underwent an operation at Muhlenberg Hospital this morning.

TO PREVENT FIRES

Captains of Department May be Ordered to Inspect Local Stores.

UNDER DIRECTION OF CHIEF.

There has been some discussion of the advisability of having the captains of the fire department, under the direction of Chief Doane make a thorough inspection of all public and semi-public buildings including stores in the city for the purpose of acquainting them with conditions in case of a fire; also to ascertain whether there is stored in these buildings anything that might cause a serious fire or increase the danger should one occur.

The councilmanic fire and building committee has talked the matter over and it is likely that an inspection of this kind will be made soon. The recent fire in New York which resulted in the loss of so many lives, has stirred the Council to action and Chief Doane is also of the opinion that every possible precaution should be taken to prevent anything of a similar nature in this city.

It is said that there have been known violations of the city ordinance regarding the storage of inflammable material in the business section of the city and no doubt steps will be taken to put a stop to this practice. It is realized that such violations not only increase the risk to the property affected, but also to adjoining property.

PASSION PLAY TALK GIVEN BY CLERGYMAN

More than 125 people defied the wind and rain last evening and attended an illustrated lecture on the Passion Play of Oberammergau, given in the parish house of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, by Rev. Maurice W. Britton, rector of St. Clement's church of New York. The lecture was interspersed with devotional hymns sung by the audience and the whole took on the appearance of a Lenten observance. The lecture was given under the auspices of the Women's Guild of the church and was greatly appreciated by those who attended.

Rev. Mr. Britton first took his audience over the ground of the scene of the famous play conducting his hearers through the groves of the little town nestling among the hills, giving minute descriptions of the scenery, personnel and make up of the various characters who take part. Photographs of the principals in the play, life size, were thrown on the screen after the prologue was given, and the audience was considerably impressed with the character shown by the actors in the tremendous drama.

The speaker narrated in an attractive manner the entertainment provided by the natives at Oberammergau for tourists and other visitors laying special stress on the apparent self-denial of the people and their reverence for the play. Before each scene there was shown pictures illustrating the ante-climaxes, depicting the prophecies taken from the old Testament. The scenes were so realistic that everybody in the audience was impressed with the solemnity of the event they were witnessing. The lecture lasted for an hour and a half.

GREENBROOK COUNCIL REACHES DESIRED GOAL.

Greenbrook Council, No. 1725, Royal Arcanum, held a smoker and celebration last night in honor of reaching the membership goal set by the grand regent. This figure was placed at 118 and the initiation last night, of four candidates gave the desired result. The council will accordingly be placed on the roll of honor.

Regent Charles W. Hall was in charge of the affair and the members thoroughly enjoyed the program. Songs and speeches were the features. The visitors in attendance included a delegation from Plainfield council, No. 711.

MAY NOT REPORT GERAN BILL FOR FORTNIGHT.

That it will take fully two weeks for the Senate Committee on Elections to get the Geran election reform bill into satisfactory shape to be reported, was the opinion given by members of the committee at the close of a long conference on the measure in Trenton Saturday afternoon.

That the bill will be passed by the Senate in such form as to carry out the wishes of the Governor seems a certainty, but many glaring faults will be eliminated first.

ERROR IN BILL MAKES REPASSAGE NECESSARY.

The fact that the word "and" appears where the word "to" ought to have been in the Edge bill requiring that all horse-drawn vehicles must carry a light after dark gives the act such a ridiculous meaning that it is probable the measure will have to be corrected by passing it through the Legislature again. The bill has already been signed by the Governor.

The use of the wrong word has given the measure such a twist that the driver of a horse-drawn vehicle shall be fined not less than $2.50 nor more than $5 if he appears on the highways at any hour of the day or night without a lighted lamp on his vehicle.

The bill was intended to provide that horse-drawn vehicles should carry lights "during the period from thirty minutes after sunset 'to' thirty minutes before sunrise." Instead the bill requires that they be carried "during the period from thirty minutes after sunset 'and' thirty minutes before sunrise."

The error has been called to the attention of Senator Edge. As the error apparently nullifies the bill it is probable that he will introduce a new measure to take its place.

Again—Spring Styles Decree New Models in Corsets

This specially arranged Spring Display of over 40 styles of the leading makes affords you an unusual opportunity to choose a model, not alone stylish, but adapted to your own requirements.

When stylists decree a change in the styles of outerapparel a corresponding change is made necessary in the designing of the new season's corset models; you will have a tendency towards a lower bust line, a slight nipping in at the waist in the back only—a long skirt extension with the shortening of the bones in the back cutting out of the skirt in the centre front, lighter boning and straight-line goring. Of course, these new changes are technical descriptions to the average woman. What concerns you most is the question as to whether we can fit you in a model best adapted to your individual requirements. And we say, unhesitatingly, we can afford you a full measure of satisfaction in every sense of the word.

Prices Range from $1.00 to $5.00

We Feature Particularly the Sahlen Corset at $1.00 to $2.00

We have the exclusive selling agency for Plainfield for the sale of this celebrated corset. It is especially adapted to meet the requirements of slender figures. They help wonderfully in rounding out a stylish figure. Ask to see the Sahlin Corset—you will be interested.

BASEBALL.

The start of the 1911 season of professional baseball games takes place today, and before the diamonds are abandoned next fall nearly 20,000 regular league contests will have been played. The Pacific Coast League is the first to begin play and the last to close.

In the sixteen days now intervening before the opening of the American and National Leagues and the American Association season, all on April 12, two small Southern leagues—the Cotton States and South Atlantic organizations—will swing into action April 6 and April 10, respectively.

In quick succession after the inauguration of the big league races, April 12, the Southern, Eastern and Western Leagues will open on April 20 with the Central League among the last of the bigger sectional leagues to get in motion, April 26. The Ohio and Connecticut State League start April 20 and 21, respectively, and the New York State and New England Leagues, April 24.

The Michigan State League does not begin to play until May 25, and is the last of the recognized leagues to open. By that time, the country over, there will be at least thirty professional leagues in the field with schedules calling for from 300 to 600 games each.

The collegiate season, less regularly accounted for, already has begun in the Southern tier of the Eastern States. The schedules of Eastern colleges call for about 800 games between now and the latter part of June.

Yale has eight of last year's nine left, including an experienced and well-balanced pitching staff, with plenty of new material. The Harvard leftovers are only six, and among the losses is Pitcher Hicks, whose work of last year will be hard to equal.

Princeton is admittedly in serious difficulties. Five of last year's players have graduated, and the leading pitcher, S. V. White, is suffering with so severe a wrench of his throwing arm and shoulder that he will not play in any of the early games. Pennsylvania, with a nucleus of four veterans, bids fair to turn out another championship nine.

An unusual number of tours is planned by college teams this year. All records in this line will be broken by Michigan by an invasion of both the South and East. The Wolverines will travel over 2,000 miles, touring Kentucky, Tennessee and Ohio, visiting Princeton, Syracuse and Brown. So far this is the only series of games in which the East will meet any Western or Middle States colleges.

An international turn will be given collegiate baseball in May when a team of picked players from the Waseda and the Keio Universities of Japan will arrive in this country and tour both the West and East, in return for the compliment paid to the players of the Orient last year when the University of Chicago team toured Japan and the Philippines.

GOLF.

Additional dates sent out from the secretary's office of the Metropolitan Golf Association call for an invitation tournament at the Tuxedo Golf Club, June 9 and 10, while the Nassau Country Club has been assigned October 5, 6 and 7. September 29 and 30 still remain as the "probable" dates for the Lesley Cup matches.

Ever since Stewart Gardner returned to Exmoor after a trip abroad dispatches have been coming out of the West to the effect that many of the greatest professionals in Great Britain are going to visit these shores in the near future. The latest report has it that Harry Vardon, James Braid, George Duncan and J. H. Taylor are coming to compete in the national open championship tournament, which will be held at Chicago, June 23 and 24.

So far as international golf is concerned, it is now claimed that Miss Mary Fownes and Miss Louise B. Elkins, a pair of well known players from Pittsburg, intend to compete in the women's championship tournament of Great Britain, to be held over the Portrush course in Ireland, during the week of May 15. When the tournament was last held there a number of years ago, Miss Rhena Adair won.

Mrs. Charles Emmons, of Steiner place, is seriously ill with heart trouble.

P. P. VanCleef, of Newark, who has been visiting relatives here for a few days, has returned home.

James Finnerty, the physical instructor, is preparing to take a trip with R. V. Pierce, a New York broker.

THE DAILY PRESS.

Plainfield, N. J., March 28, 1911.

TO COMPEL THE P.S.C. TO GIVE CHEAPER RATE

Assemblyman Donnelly's bill to require electric light companies to fix a rate of eight cents per killowatt hour for electricity throughout the State was opposed by the Public Service Corporation when a hearing was held on the bill yesterday by the House miscellaneous business committee. Former Senator William D. Edwards, John Burleigh, vice-president of the corporation, and Farley Osgood, superintendent of the electric department of the corporation, were included in the speakers against the measure.

Assemblyman Donnelly, Assemblyman Christie and Richard Carrick, of the People's Mutual Light and Power Company, which is endeavoring in the courts to sustain a franchise granted it by Jersey City to supply electric current at eight cents per kilowatt hour, favored the measure. The Public Service supplies 132 municipalities and has a maximum rate of ten cents per kilowatt hour. Mr. Burleigh said the small consumer, who pays ten cents a kilowatt hour, is a losing customer to the corporation. Some of the larger consumers get the current for two and a half cents an hour, was one statement.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION ELECTION.

Because aquorum was not present when it came time to elect officers for the ensuing year at the annual meeting of the Plainfield Building & Loan Association last evening, the election will be held tomorrow evening in the usual place. Several changes were made in the Board of Directors and the annual reports showed the association to be in a flourishing condition. The eighteenth series was opened and upward of 300 shares were subscribed. About $28,000 was subscribed for new loans in the new series.

The new board consists of L. C. Barkalew, W. R. Codington, Peter McDonough, Louis Klein, W. A. Woodruff, Herman Schwed, J. C. Blimm, B. Frank Coriell, E. M. Laing, J. P. Homan, Charles M. Dolliver and Henry Liefke; Messrs. McDonough, Schwed and Dolliver taking the places of E. W. Titsworth, Jacob Voehl and J. E. Flannery.

The auditing committee, consisting of A. D. Edgar, Clarence Goss and William McD. Coriell, was re-elected.

CLAN MACKENZIE ENTERTAINS ITS FRIENDS.

Clan Mackenzie, No. 204, Order of Scottish Clans, held a social for members and friends last night, following the regular business meeting. Chief Robert Murray was in charge and an impromptu program of speeches, vocal and instrumental music was enjoyed. Among those giving addresses or songs were Clansmen MacDonald, Mac Phearson, Mc Inness, Spalding, Petrie and Birrell. Mrs. McInness and Mrs. Gray also sang and Miss Isabella Gloak gave piano selections. Refreshments were served in conclusion.

In the business session, several candidates were voted into membership and a number of applications were received. The clan is rapidly growing in numbers and the officers are looking forwad to a busy season.

Emulating E. P. Weston.

LeRoy Belue, Edison Cardner, Benjamin Micholson and Bertram Smith, of this city, diciples of Edward Payson Weston, enjoyed a walk to New Brunswick and back on Sunday. The young men left here at 8:30 p. m., arriving at New Brunswick at 11:30 p. m. They left the latter place at 2:30 o'clock in the morning, reaching home at 5:30 o'clock. Next Saturday Bertram Smith and Benjamin Micholson will walk to Princeton, if the weather permits.

Exempt Firemen's Pension.

It is the opinion of State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, according to Joseph H. O'Neil, of Elizabeth, that Senate bill, No. 125, which has for its object the taking away of pensions from exempt firemen will not pass. The matter is to be taken up at the coming convention in Newark, in May. Opposition to the passage of the bill has become strong throughout the State.

Miantonomo Tribe, No. 118, I. O. R. M., will work the adoption degree tomorrow night. After the adoption degree is conferred on six palefaces, refreshments will be served in the banquet hall.

Number 3
THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

STEWART IN RACE FOR THE SHRIEVALTY

George J. Stewart, chairman of the Republican City Committee, of Elizabeth, aroused more interest in the Republican contest for the Shrievalty of Union county yesterday, when he officially announced his candidacy for the office.

"Yes, I am a candidate," he said to a reporter. "I am a candidate now and have been a candidate for the last two years. However, I do not care to give any detailed statement of my position at present. I shall wait and hear what some of the other candidates have to say."

Mr. Stewart referred to the other candidates, Under Sheriff William H. Wright and Joseph H. Neill. "Mr. Wright," he said, "no doubt thinks that he has a good chance for the office because of his present official position. Mr. Neill, probably, is banking on his position with the labor interests."

Now that both Under Sheriff Wright and Mr. Stewart have announced publicly their positions the contest will take on added interest. Joseph H. Neill is known to be candidate, although he has not as yet made an official announcement of such candidacy. Mr. Stewart is a member of the Union County Board of Elections and has an excellent record in that capacity. He is extremely popular in Elizabeth, where he is known as a solid citizen.

From what can be learned at present the race in the primary contest promises to be a triangle one, with a strong candidate at each corner. It is thought that other candidates will announce themselves, but is it admitted by most Republicans that the names already mentioned will be the strongest that will appear.

All three candidates, it is said, have canvassed both Elizabeth and the county and are well pleased with the present outlook.

GOOD POOL SCORES AT COLUMBUS CLUB.

Several good scores were made in the pool tournament which opened last night at the Columbus Club, on West Front street, and there was considerable interest shown on the part of the large crowd present. The tournament will be continued tomorrow night, as the club holds a regular meeting this evening, to confer the second degree on several members.

Last night's scores were as follows: Mack and Brown, 100; M. Wilson and Courain, 77; Schaeffer and Joseph O'Keefe, 85; Edmundson and King, 84. The match tomorrow night will be between the next teams in order of entry. In pairing off the players, a poor one is paired with a good one.

GIRLS LURED AWAY ARE RETURNED HOME

A story is going the rounds in Elizabeth today that two young Italian girls, lured away from Philadelphia, were in this city yesterday looking for the woman who was going to secure them employment in New York city. The story told by the girls when brought before Chief of Police Tenny in Elizabeth, yesterday, was that they had gone to New York and not liking the place and having been warned that they would be better off home, started on their way. They arrived here in the afternoon and were taken by a local woman to Elizabeth where they were left wandering about the city.

Chief Tenny communicated with the parents of the two young women and they were taken to Philadelphia this morning, sader, but wiser.

CIVIC LEAGUE PLAN HAS STRONG BACKERS.

Members of the Union County Bar Association and Union County Medical Association are interested in the projected Civic League to be formed in Elizabeth on Sunday, April 9. Each of the associations mentioned will be entitled to representation in the proposed league by four of their number.

The committee on plan and scope held a meeting yesterday in Elizabeth for the purpose of formulating a plan of procedure best calculated to make the league a success.

Mrs. Thomas C. Mac Nair.

Mrs. Thomas C. Mac Nair, aged seventy-six years, died yesterday morning at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Albert Giddes, of Codington avenue. She had been a sufferer for some time from a complication of troubles. Mrs. Mac Nair was a native of Church Hill, Bucks county, Pa., and has lived in the borough about ten years. Her husband died in June 1908. Besides Mrs. Giddes, she leaves one son, Samuel Mac Nair, of New York State. The funeral will be held at her late home Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock and burial will be made in North Plainfield cemetery.

BIBLE CLASS TO EAT REAL AFRICAN DINNER.

For the first time in the history of this city an African dinner will be served by the Volunteer Bible class of the Park Avenue Baptist church this evening. Mrs. Gabriel Reid Maguire, wife of the pastor, is the teacher of the class and is responsible for the menu which comprises some of the things she learned to eat and digest while on her honeymoon.

The menu follows:

Nsusu Nlambudi, Mbaya Mamba, Zimbala Zimfwa, Madese, Macessa, Lase, Mdudi Minlangu, Bilekwa Bintote, Zinsaffu, Swickety, Mampa Ye Kinowone, Beswicky Nlanga, and the feast will be concluded with Dimpa Malgua. It is promised that those who attend the dinner will be surprised at the toothsomeness of these dishes.

Miss Margaret Lyons, of Washing avenue, has returned from a visit with a sister in New York city.

ROYAL Baking Powder
Economy

The manufacturers of Royal Baking Powder have always declined to produce a cheap baking powder at the sacrifice of quality.

Royal Baking Powder is made from pure grape cream of tartar, and is the embodiment of all the excellence possible to be attained in the highest class baking powder.

Royal Baking Powder costs only a fair price, and is more economical at its price than any other leavening agent, because of the superlative quality and absolute wholesomeness of the food it makes.

Mixtures made in imitation of baking powders, but containing alum, are frequently distributed from door to door, or given away in grocery stores. Such mixtures are dangerous to use in food. In England, France, Germany and some sections of the United States their sale is prohibited by law. Alum is a dangerous mineral acid, and all physicians condemn baking powders containing it.

The label of alum baking powders must show the ingredients.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

The sale of seats for the appearance of Ethel Barrymore at the Plainfield theatre on Saturday night this week opened Saturday morning last, and will undoubtedly prove to be very heavy. Miss Barrymore is always welcome, but it seems as if she will be doubly so just now on account of the strength and attractiveness of her offerings. The bill in which she is to be seen is a double one by J. M. Barrie consisting of the three-act play, "Alice Sit-By-The-Fire," and the one act drama, "The Twelve Pound Look."

There are many ways in which the Black Patti musical comedy company differs from all colored attractions, and a visit to see this best of all shows when it comes to the Plainfield theatre Tuesday, April 4, will compel those who have been complaining, that all shows are alike to qualify this statement by adding except the Black Patti musical comedy company, and this year the fifteenth trans-American tour is mapped out to cover most all the large cities of the American continent.

Farce comedy is the most popular form of theatrical entertainment, because in addition to amusing the people and distracting their attention from ordinary cares of the day, it gives them their very first chance to hear the newest and brightest humor of the hour and the latest song hits of the hour. Farce comedy is elastic and will allow of constant changes, and the introduction of new and catchy material, and while the thread of the story is never broken, it is capable of being strengthened by the addition of the latest "stuff." "McFadden's Flats," which will be presented at the Plainfield theatre Thursday, matinee and night, is no exception to the rule.

Proctor's Fine Show.

The Four Mason's in "A Game of Whist," is an amusing farce comedy sketch being presented at Proctor's theatre. Dorothy Dainton, a charming singer, makes a hit. She sings a baseball song in which pictures of local players are shown, including Jack Martin and the Plainfield Baseball Club. Pike and Calam, dancers, are above the average and The Oliver Duo, Italian street singers, are exceptionally good.

—The Hope minstrels will hold a regular rehearsal tonight. The principals and chorus now have their respective parts well in hand and the rehearsals are running smoothly.

An overheated stove set fire to the cabin of the schooner Helen W. Walton, of Philadelphia, lying at the Dodge & Bliss Co.'s pier on the Hackensack meadows, Jersey City, during the absence of her skipper, Captain Bob McGee. Four Jersey City fire companies trailed out on the meadows and the firemen finished the trip to the burning boat with extinguishers under their arms. They made short work of the blaze. The damage was slight.

Visitors who thronged the Atlantic City boardwalk Sunday afternoon, were given a thrill when the J. Edward Kirwan, a heavily-laden schooner, bearing into Absecom Inlet, ran aground on the bar puon which the steamship Brazoria was wrecked last summer, and, listing far over, lay in a dangerous position, while the crew made preparations to put off in yawls. Launching their power boat, the Atlantic City life-saving crew set out to the assistance of the stranded craft, and, under favorable tidal conditions, the schooner was floated within three hours.

THROUGH THE CANAL IN LESS THAN TWO YEARS.

Small vessels will be using the Panama Canal in January, 1913, according to members of a Congressional party who arrived at Washington from the Isthmus yesterday. The canal will ultimately accommodate ships 1,000 feet long, but it is proposed to rush work on the mid-gates in the locks so as to permit small ships to pass, while the end gates are being completed.

The Congressmen had a stormy passage both ways, and in a blow off Hatteras, on the return trip, three members—Senator Bradley and Representatives Mondell and Langley—had narrow escapes from being washed overboard by giant waves.

South Pole Ship Back.

We WANT COMPETITION

of the Right Sort, Not the Following Kind!

A Mrs. S— after selecting her outfit and learning the total cost from our plainly marked price tags, said she preferred to make comparisons elsewhere before ordering, to which we readily agreed, for it's a thing we always URGE!

On getting another store's prices (where they were marked in private signs) she found ours were far less, and SAID so. The salesman promptly dropped to our figures—AND GOT THE ORDER.

Here, where there's but ONE PLAINLY MARKED PRICE ON EVERY ITEM, such an "accommodating" and sudden price drop would be impossible—here, when you read the price tag, you KNOW it's already at lowest point, for ALL prices are made and REMAIN on the SAME UNIFORMLY SMALL PROFIT BASIS. We don't HAVE to run a "leader" here and there for an hour, or a day, to catch trade, as ALL lines are equally good values EVERY day in the year!

All we want is HONEST competition that meet OUR plainly marked prices WITH prices you can READ!

ISN'T THAT FAIR?

EASY CREDIT 6 months, 1 year, or 1½ year's time to pay—or 10 per cent off for cash.
EVERY PRICE MARKED IN PLAIN FIGURES.

These Wash Boilers are called "The World's Best" for $1.25 and are size No. 9. They are strictly hand-made, of good quality tin sides and strong copper bottom. They are indeed well worth $1.25, but we bought a quantity, so are making this Special Sale for a few days.

We doubt if you will be able to equal such a real bargain in Wash Boiler at this price. And remember that price, 98 cents.

BUY ONE TOMORROW.

PRACTICED HYPNOTISM; HEATH IS EXPELLED.

The experiments in hypnotism which Harold Heath, a student at Pennington Seminary, practiced on some of his fellow-students, have led to his suspension from the institution. His home is in Kingston, Jamaica. Heath was a member of the junior class, and until last fall had been one of the brightest pupils in the seminary. As a member of a literary and debating society in the school, Heath became interested in hypnotism last fall, when he read a paper on psycic phenomena. During the winter the young man spent much of his time reading books on the subject and experimenting, according to statements made by fellow-pupils to the faculty investigating committee.

During an experiment more than a week ago on George Pratt, the latter suddenly became ill and faint. Alarmed, his friend attempted to revive him from his stupor, but subsequently was forced to call in outside help, and in this way, it is reported, an account of what the group had been doing reached the faculty.

ARREST OF NEGRO WHO THREATENED TO KILL.

The negroes living in the gas house district of Somerville, have been terrorized during the past week by the nightly visits of "Pearl" Rogers, an ex-convict, who has demanded entrance to many homes and threatened to kill the inmates. The police had made several attempts to capture the negro, but he always eluded his pursuers until early yesterday morning, when he was arrested on Division street by Policemen Joseph Hanlon and Robert Holmes.

The negro was released from the State prison a few months ago, after serving a sentence of thirteen years for robbery and attempted murder. The local authorities were informed some time before Rogers' release that he had become partly demented as the result of his long imprisonment. Shortly after his release his mother, who resides in Trenton, applied to the authorities of that city for protection against her son, whom she declared was insane. When arrested, his pockets were filled with silver coin.

"I can hardly imagine you without the Nickel Trust that's all! What in the world shall you do with yourself?"

"Oh, various kinds of things. I think I'll get married, for one. Then I'll take a rest and sort of look around. Maybe something will turn up. I've concluded to win the Derby next year—that's something anyway."

"Rather! Have you thought of anything else?"

She laughed a little, but was grave the next moment, for she knew him much too well to believe that he had taken such a step out of caprice, or a mere fancy for change. He noticed the grave look and was silent for a few moments.

"The Derby's a side show," he said at last. "I've come over to get married, and I want you to help me. Will you?"

"Can I?" asked Lady Maud, evasively.

"Yes, you can, and I believe there'll be trouble unless you do."

"Who is she? Do I know her?" She was trying to put off the evil moment.

"Oh, yes, you know her quite well. It's Mme. Cordova."

"But she's engaged to Mons. Logotheti—"

"I don't care. I mean to marry her if she marries any one. He shan't have her anyway."

"But I cannot deliberately help you to break off her engagement! It's impossible!"

"See here," answered Mr. Van Torp. "You know that Greek, and you know me. Which of us will make the best husband for an English girl? That's what Mme. Cordova is, after all. I put it to you. If you were forced to choose one of us yourself, which would you take? That's the way to look at it."

"But Miss Donne is not 'forced' to take one of you—"

"She's going to be. It's the same. Besides, I said 'if.' Won't you answer me?"

"She's in love with Mons. Logotheti," said Lady Maud, rather desperately.

"Is she, now? I wonder. I don't much think so myself. He's clever and he's obstinate, and he's just made her think she's in love, that's all. Anyhow, that's not an answer to my question. Other things being alike, if she had to choose, which of us would be the best husband for her?—the better, I mean. You taught me to say 'better,' didn't you?"

Lady Maud tried to smile.

"Of two, yes," she answered. "You are forcing my hand, my dear friend," she went on very gravely. "You know very well that I trust you with all my heart. If it were possible to imagine a case in which the safety of the world could depend on my choosing one of you for my husband, you know very well that I should take you, though I never was the least little bit in love with you, any more than you ever were with me."

"Well, but if you would, she ought," argued Mr. Van Torp. "It's for her own good, and as you're a friend of hers, you ought to help her to do what's good for her. That's only fair. If she doesn't marry me, she's certain to marry that Greek, so it's a forced choice, it appears to me."

"But I can't—"

"She's a nice girl, isn't she?"

"Yes, very."

"And you like her, don't you?"

"Very much. Her father was my father's best friend."

"I don't believe in atavism," observed the American, "but that's neither here nor there. You know what you wrote me. Do you believe she'll be miserable with Logotheti or not?"

"I think she will," Lady Maud answered truthfully. "But I may be wrong."

"No; you're right. I know it. But marriage is a gamble anyway, as you know better than any one. Are you equally sure that she would be miserable with me? Dead sure, I mean."

"No, I'm not sure. But that's not a reason—"

"It's a first-rate reason. I care for that lady, and I want her to be happy, and as you admit that she will have a better chance of happiness with me than with Logotheti, I'm going to marry her myself, not only because I want to, but because it will be a long sight better for her. See? No fault in that line of reasoning, is there?"

"So far as reasoning goes—" Lady Maud's tone was half an admission.

"That's all I wanted you to say," interrupted the American. "So that's settled, and you're going to help me."

"No," answered Lady Maud quietly; "I won't help you to break off that engagement. But if it should come to nothing, without your interfering—that is, by the girl's own free will and choice and change of mind, I'd help you to marry her if I could."

"But you admit that she's going to be miserable," said Van Torp stubbornly.

"I'm sorry for her, but it's none of my business. It's not honorable to try and make trouble between engaged people, no matter how unmatched they may be."

Went to the Window, Softly Blowing a Queer Tune.

"Funny idea of honor," observed the American, "that you're bound to let a friend of yours break her neck at the very gravel pit where you were nearly smashed yourself! In the hunting field you'd grab her bridle if she wouldn't listen to you, but in a matter of marriage—oh, no! 'It's dishonorable to interfere,' 'She's made her choice and she must abide by it,' and all that kind of stuff!"

Lady Maud's clear eyes met his angry blue ones calmly.

"I don't like you when you say such things," she said, lowering her voice a little.

"I didn't mean to be rude," answered the millionaire, almost humbly. "You see I don't always know. I learnt things differently from what you did. I suppose you'd think it an insult if I said I'd give a large sum of money to your charity the day I married Mme. Cordova, if you'd help me through."

"Please stop," Lady Maud's face darkened visibly. "That's not like you."

"I'll give a million pounds at ring," said Mr. Van Torp.

Lady Maud leaned back in her corner of the sofa, clasped her hands rather tightly together in her lap, her white throat flushed as when the light of dawn kisses it, in maybe, and the fresh tint in her cheeks deepened softly; her lips were visibly shut, her eyelids quivered a little, and she looked straight before her across the room.

"You can do a pretty good deal with a million pounds," said Mr. Van Torp, after the silence had lasted nearly half a minute.

"Don't!" cried Lady Maud, in an odd voice.

"Forty thousand pounds a year," observed the millionaire thoughtfully. "You could do quite a great deal of good with that, couldn't you?"

"Don't! Please don't!"

HIGH SCHOOL DEBATES ON IMPORTANT TOPICS

Two more of the series of debates in Senior English took place yesterday and this morning at the Plainfield High School. Yesterday the class took up the question "Is a College Education an Advantage to the Business Man of Today," and this morning they discussed "Is it Better for a College to be located in a City of Over 10,000 Inhabitants, or a Small Town." Both were won by the affirmative, the first being decided by a class vote—12 to 10.

Those who took the affirmative on the question yesterday were Marion Snyder, Helen Campbell and Susan Bennett, with Eunice Eckert and Mabel Stutsman as critics. In this morning's debate the winning side was represented by Anne Johnson as leader, who was opposed by Agnes Scribner. The judges were Anna Templin and Edward Hatfield.

SALVATION ARMY GETS $3,500 TOWARDS FUND

The effort which the local corps of the Salvation Arm is making to raise funds to pay off the mortgage on their headquarters on East Second street promises success judging from results already obtained. Up to yesterday conditional subscriptions had been obtained amounting to $3,500. The condition being that the balance of the total amount, $7,000 be obtained by April 9 next, the day on which Eva Booth, commander of the Army in this country, makes her visit to this city. The encouragement which Captain A. S. Hewitt and his helpers have received, leads them to believe that the amount required will be subscribed.

A citizens' committee has taken the matter up and is aiding the soldiers of the army to gather the pledges. The committee is made up of the following: Chairman, Charles W. McCutchen; H. H. Pond, treasurer, and State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, George L. Babcock, George A. Chapman, R. Henry Depew, Alexander Gilbert, Arthur M. Harris, George E. Hall, Mrs. Frederick G. Mead, Alexander Millar, Percy H. Stewart, Mrs. Percy H. Stewart and William Palmer Smith.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred B. Dunavan will remove next week from East Second street to East Front street, occupying the property formerly owned by A. A. Farland.

HEALTH OFFICERS PLAN ORGANIZATION

Health officers and sanitary inspectors in New Jersey are planning to form a State organization for the purpose of furthering the interest of health matters. Already two meetings have been held and another one will be held in Newark about April 17 when the Health Officers and Sanitary Inspectors' Association will be formed.

The health officers who have been interested in the matter have appointed a temporary committee comprising C. H. Wells, of Montclair, chairman; J. Scott MacNutt, of Orange; secretary; Dr. J. A. Brown, of Newark; Nelson Elliott, of Passaic; R. N. Hoyt, of Summit; B. H. Obert, of Asbury Park; John O'Brien, Jr., of Plainfield, and Dr. J. C. Saile, of Bloomfield.

Health boards throughout the State will be requested to adopt a resolution suggesting that conferences be held between the State Board of Health and health officers and sanitary inspectors, as formerly, preferably at Trenton. The new organization will probably plan to meet once in three months to discuss matters of interest to their department. There are about sixty health officers and sanitary inspectors eligible for membership in the proposed organization.

MASONIC GRAND LODGE TO HOLD CONVENTION.

The twenty-fourth annual communication, when officers will be elected of the Grand Lodge, F. and A. M., of New Jersey, will be held in Trenton during the latter part of April.

Reports, which will be read, will show the order to have more than 30,000 members, and to be in a prosperous financial condition. It is expected that most of the elective offices will be filled by the promotion of the officers holding the next lower positions. At the annual communication the usual reception to the grand officers will be given.

CLUB'S NAME CHANGED TO AVOID CONFUSION.

At a meeting of the Social Five, an organization which has been in existance for more than a year, last evening at the home of Monroe A. Nichols, Fairview avenue, it was decided to change the name to the "Pastime Social Club." The members have been annoyed, they say, by other organizations having assumed the name under which the club was formed and in order that a distinction may be made decided upon a change.

Arrangements were made last evening for the first anniversary dance of the club which will be held in Sebring's hall on Tuesday evening, April 25. The coming event will be by invitation only and the committee having the dance in charge are discriminating in their selection of guests.

The officers elected for the year are: President, F. E. Conshea; vice-president, M. A. Nichols; recording secretary, George E. Hone, financial secretary, John P. Connolly; treasurer, Robert T. Skinner.

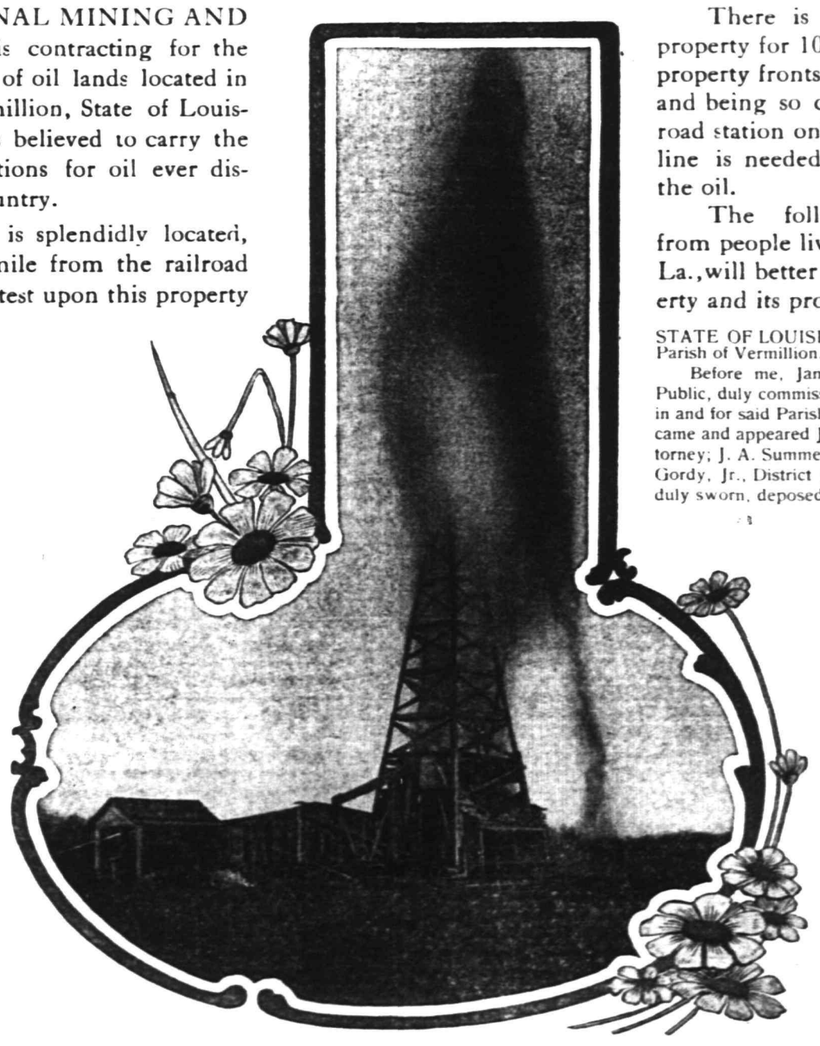
National Mining and Leasing Co.

TO PURCHASE OIL LANDS AND DRILL FOR OIL IN THE PARISH OF VERMILLION, STATE OF LOUISIANA.

The NATIONAL MINING AND LEASING CO. is contracting for the purchase of a tract of oil lands located in the Parish of Vermillion, State of Louisiana. This land is believed to carry the best surface indications for oil ever discovered in this country.

This property is splendidly located, being less than a mile from the railroad station. A surface test upon this property shows that if an ordinary walking stick or umbrella be pushed into the ground, and when removed the gas from the puncture may be ignited and will burn for several seconds, and it is believed by people who are in a position to know, that a well drilled upon this property would be likely to start off with from 5,000 to 50,000 barrels of oil daily.

Some of the greatest oil producers have been drilled in the State of Louisiana.



There is room upon this property for 10 oil wells. The property fronts on a good road and being so close to the railroad station only a mile of pipe line is needed for transporting the oil.

The following affidavits from people living in Abbeville, La., will better explain the property and its prospects for oil:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, Parish of Vermillion.

Before me, James R. Kitchell, Notary Public, duly commissioned and sworn within and for said Parish and State, personally came and appeared J. N. Green, District Attorney; J. A. Summers, Merchant, and M.T. Gordy, Jr., District Judge, who first being duly sworn, deposed and said that they saw on the property purchased from W. A. White, Esq., situated in W. A. White's addition to the town of Abbeville, gas burn several seconds which exuded from punctures in the earth by a rod one inch in diameter, to a depth of from one to two feet.

Sworn to and subscribed before me.

J. R. KITCHELL, Notary Public.

Signed—

J. N. Green, District Attorney; J. A. Summers, Merchant; M. T. Gordy, Jr., District Judge.

SUPPER AT TRINITY

The Young Women's Mission Band of Church Serves Appetizing Dishes.

WAITRESSES ARE KEPT BUSY.

Attractive Hand-Painted Menu Cards —Miss Etta Raybert General Chairman for the Affair.

Under the auspices of the Young Women's Mission Band of Trinity Reformed church, an oyster and chicken salad supper was given in the lecture room of the church, last night, and like all affairs given by this energetic band of women was a great success. The supper, which was a fine one, was of the kind that appeals to a hungry appetite and there was an abundance of good things to eat.

The menu comprised chicken bouillon, creamed and fried oysters with potatoes, relish, chicken salad, all kinds of pies, ice cream, cake and coffee, and after enjoying such a fine supper, an opportunity was given those present to swell the receipts of the affair by purchasing home-made candies and cakes.

The Sunday-school room was tastefully decorated for the supper, there being a pleasing arangement of American flags, both large and small, while the several tables were also made attractive through decorations. A feature was the hand painted menu cards, representing scenes from Chantecler, Easter events, pussy willow and other spring flowers. These cards were the clever work of the Misses Edna Cole, Edna Dilts, Gertrude Schlief, Helen Smith and Emma Ryno, and after the supper they were sold to different ones who admired the artistic work.

During the early part of the evening six tables were sufficient to supply the patrons, but in less than an hour it was necesary to provide a number of additional tables in the primary department to serve all who desired their supper. Besides the supper, which in itself was a strong attraction, a feature was the sociability on the part of all present. As a result the band received a substantial sum for its mission work.

Miss Etta Raybert was the general chairman of the affair and it was largely due to her efforts that it was such a great success, not forgetting the earnest and faithful work of those who assisted on the various committees, which were as follows:

Supper committee, Mrs. F. S. Cutter, chairman; Mrs. F. E. Woodruff, Miss Lillian A. Force, Mrs. Geo. Mantz, Mrs. A. M. Morrell, Mrs. Harry Cook, Mrs. Lorenzo Townley. Table committee, Mrs. Will F. Williams, chairman; Mrs. Corra Ryno, Mrs. A. B. Cole, Mrs. Leonard S. Smith. Candy table, Miss Edna Dilts, Miss Edna Cole, Miss Helen Smith, Miss Gerturde Schlief. Ice Cream, Mrs. H. C. Van Emburgh, Mrs. Chas. M. Dolliver; cake, Miss May Van Fleet, Mrs. J. H. Freeman; waitresses, Mrs. John Higgins, the Misses Jennie Sears, Idabel C. M. Conover, Rosamond Rogers, Helen Carne, Irma Coddington, Gertrude Enander, Edna Bird, Josie Kissam, Miss Mabel Wilson was the efficient cashier and had charge of the finances.

R.W. BARNES TO RETIRE; H. VIEBROCK SUCCESSOR.

Henry Viebrock has purchased the property on Park avenue, formerly owned by Edmund Pack and also the grocery business there which was owned by R. H. Barnes. He will take possession on Saturday, when Mr. Barnes, who will retire, will take a year's rest. The latter has been in the grocery business for twenty years, and has been successful.

Mr. Viebrock informs the public through an advertisement in this paper that the store at 217 Park avenue will be fully stocked with seasonable goods and the prices will be reasonable. Mr. Viebrock has had considerable experience in the grocery business and at one time was in the employ of Mr. Barnes. The store telephone number is 1519-W.

Africa with Stereopticon.

Rev. Dr. Joseph Clark, for the past thirty-nine years the foremost Baptist missionary in Africa, will give an address on Christian work in that country, at the First Baptist church, this evening. It will be illustrated with many lantern pictures. Dr. Clark is a most interesting speaker and all are cordially invited to hear Dr. Clark. At this mid-week meeting an additional number of persons will be received for baptism.

Second Degree on Thirty-three.

STEWART'S TALK ON AUTO LUBUCATING

William H. Stewart, of this city, lectured before a large number of automobile enthusiastics last evening in the Stewart Automobile Academy, West Fifty-fourth street, New York city, at which a number of Plainfielders were present. Mr. Stewart, who is vice-president of the academy, took for his subject "Automobile Lubricating" and pointed out the difference between knowing how to run an automobile and learning the proper way to lubricate one.

Mr. Stewart demonstrated that a lack of knowledge on this subject brought troubles to the automobilist which could hardly be expressed in just plain language. He declared that one of the most important things to learn about an automobile is proper lubricating, saying that only the best grade of lubricant should be used as cheaper grades are the true representative of false economy.

The lecture was appreciated by those present and served to make car owners think seriously on the subject.

WEDDED 25 YRS; HOLD CELEBRATION

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Stillman, of West Fourth street, celebrated their twenty-fifth anniversary last evening, surrounded by their children and guests to the number of forty-eight. Many handsome gifts were presented to the happy couple, including a solid silver tea service, by the children. Among the novel gifts was $12.50 in bright new silver coins, the gift of eight friends.

Addresses were made by Rev. Edwin Shaw, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church and Rev. Theodore L. Gardiner, editor of the Sabbath Recorder. Miss Nettie Stillman presided at the piano and rendered the opening selection of a program of much entertainment. Three sisters and a brother of the couple rendered selections and Mrs. Frank Shotwell sang delightfully a solo. Reading and recitations in dialect by Mrs. W. B. Grannat ended a happy program.

In his address Rev. Mr. Shaw congratulated Mr. and Mrs. Stillman on having enjoyed a quarter century of happy married life and wished them another long series of years of happiness. Rev. Mr. Gardiner spoke in a similar vein.

The decorations of the dining room were pink and white and the table held a huge birthday cake, bearing the numerals 1886—1911, a gift of an uncle and aunt of Mr. and Mrs. Stillman. The arrangements for the affair were made by Mrs. W. Clawson, Mrs. Bert Wilson and Miss Ethel Morris. Much credit is due the children of Mr. and Mrs. Stillman for the evening's enjoyment.

SALVATION ARMY'S CELEBRATION PLANS

In addition to the two special services at which Miss Eva Booth, will speak in connection with the twentieth anniversary of the local corps of the Salvation Army, on Sunday, April 9, two other meetings of considerable importance have been planned. At the Park Avenue Baptist church, Colonel Lilliam Peart, the chief secretary of the army, assisted by the staff band of twenty-two pieces and several officers, will conduct a rally in the evening. A special program of music will be rendered by the band.

Colonel Alexander Damon, the National Field Secretary, and one of the army's able speakers, assisted by visiting officers will conduct the evening service at the First M. E. church. In the afternoon Commander Booth will speak at the First Baptist church, as announced.

Speakers for Banquet.

Former Mayor Alexander Gilbert and Col. Charles W. Fuller, the latter of Jersey City, will be the speakers at the second monthly dinner of the Chamber of Commerce to be held Thursday evening, April 6, at 6:30 o'clock at the Waldorf Hotel. Following the dinner, all will adjourn to the chamber rooms in the Frost building, where the speech making will take place. Mr. Gilbert will address the members and their friends on the subject of "The New York Clearing House."

Talk on South Amercia.

Charles D. Harrey, who has been at work in South America, as a missionary, and is now home on a furlough, will speak about that country at the Crescent Avenue church tonight.

CONFERENCE OPEN

Bp. Warren Presides at Annual Sessions of Newark District of M. E. Church.

250 MINISTERS ARE PRESENT.

Probable That There Will Be a Memorial to Legislature on Safeguarding Factory Employees' Lives.

Rev. Dr. C. M. Anderson, of the First M. E. hcurch; Rev. C. S. Kemble, of Monroe Avenue M. E. church, and Rev. Ora J. Shoop, of Grace M. E. church, are among the 250 Methodist ministers attending the annual session of the Newark Conference, which began this morning in the Central M. E. church on Market street, Newark. Bishop H. W. Warren is presiding. The conference promises to be one of the most important in recent years and it is predicted that more than the usual number of changes will be made.

Bishop Warren arrived in Newark yesterday and in the afternoon he held a conference at the Continental hotel, his headquarters, with the district superintendents, Rev. Dr. D. B. F. Randolph, of this city; Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut, of Newark; Rev. Dr. C. C. Miller, of Paterson, and Rev. Dr. G. W. Smith, of Passaic, comprising the "cabinet." The conference takes in all the northern part of New Jersey and parts of New York and Pennsylvania.

Regarding changes, it is expected that Rev. Dr. C. M. Anderson and Rev. C. S. Kemble, of this city, will be returned, while Rev. Mr. Shoop plans to go to Pittsburg, where he has received a call from the Mount Washington M. E. church. This necessitates his transfer from the conference.

The district superintendents have expressed themselves to the bishop as being favorably inclined toward the entire conference visiting Pennington Seminary and it is expected that this will be done tomorrow morning.

Undergraduates and candidates for admission on trial and for local orders were examined yesterday, according to custom. They will be ordained on Sunday.

Candidates for probation of full membership met the conference committee on qualifications this afternoon. Other meetings will be held for the purpose of meeting candidates during the week.

Following the roll call and the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper this morning, a memorial service closed the morning session. This afternoon meetings of the Women's Home Missionary Society and the Conference Life Insurance Association will be held and the anniversary of the Centenary Fund and the Preachers' Aid Society will be the feature this evening.

It is quite possible that the conference will adopt a memorial calling on the Legislature to enact a stringent law providing for the safeguarding of the lives of employees in all factories in the State. Bishop Warren has expressed himself favorably on the subject.

CONFERANCE HELD ON CHILD WELFARE

Hugh Fox, Henry L. DeForest, W. H. Wherry, Dr. W. H. Murray, Miss Holly and Miss Phillips, representing the Charity Organization Society held a conference last night, to which Councilman F. L. Montgomery, chairman, and City Judge William G. DeMeza, were invited.

The purpose was to consider ways and means to care for and treat the children of poor people. These questions have constantly been coming up and the society believes that a conferecne with the alms committee and the city judge would prove beneficial and bring about a more satisfactory solution of the problem. Judge DeMeza offered some valuable suggestions to the organization members as well as the alms committee, right in line with his daily experience in treating with children in court.

There was a discussion of the plans for holding sessions of the juvenlie court, and it was generally agreed to be an excellent scheme for disposing of such cases. The members of the alms committee gave others present the benefit of their experience in treating with poor people and no doubt some changes will be made which will give more satisfactory results, especially in treating with the children of poor people.

Sesame to Meet.

LECTURE ON BIRDS

Huge Audience Pleased With Edward Avis' Evening in Birdland.

REMARKABLE AS A MIMIC.

His Whistling is Captivating and His Knowledge of the Song Birds is Extraordinary.

Before an audience that literally packed the Washington School auditorium las evening, Edward Avis, the noted bird mimic, gave his wonderful lecture, "An Evening in Birdland." To say that the audience was delighted is putting it mildly. They were carried away with the beautiful exhibition and did not hesitate to voice their approval.

As an entertainment it was perhaps the most entrancing ever held here and as an instructive lesson, nothing could have been more appropriate at this season of the year, when the birds are beginning to wing their way north for the spring and summer. Mr. Avis' ability as a mimic was demonstrated in more than one way. Whistling in imitation of many of the subjects shown on the screen and illustrations with the violin to show that many of the masterpieces of music were inspired by song birds were faithfully rendered.

The program included "The Morning Choir," whistling solo with violin accompaniment and stories of the robin, wood-thrush, Wilson's thrush, hermit thrush and thrush notations. "Woodland Echoes" introducing the chirping sparrow, vesper sparrow, song sparrow and other of similar breed. "A Noonday Concert" by the Caroline sparrow, wren, red-winged blackbird and the field sparrow; a truly pretty quartet.

The "Mocking Bird" was a wonderful exhibition and brought salvos of applause. Mr. Avis' beautiful whistling in this number captivated the gathering. Mendelssohn's Spring Song, played with delightful expression on the violin, showed conclusively where the greet master obtained many of his melodies. The birdlike notes thrilled from the pursed lips of the performer while the delicate notes of the violin added charm to the performance. In the last number on the program, "Birds in the Fields and Woods," over fifty different songs were introduced, accompanied with views of the birds imitated on the screen.

It was truly a remarkable and instructive entertainment.

ASSEMBLY BILL TO ABOLISH REGISTERS

If a bill introduced by Assemblyman Calvin Brodhead, of Union county, becomes a law the office of register of deeds will be abolished in all the counties of the State except Essex and Hudson. Mr. Brodhead's measure, put in yesterday afternoon, provides that the office of register shall be done away with in all counties between 140,000 and 200,000 population. Among those who are affected by this bill is Frank H. Smith, of this city, Union county's register.

On the first day of the session Senator Leavitt, Republican, introduced a bill to abolish the office of register in all second-class counties. Owing to opposition from Union and Camden counties that bill was never passed, but another measure was passed, which does away with the office of register in the counties of Mercer, Middlesex, Monmouth and Bergen. The act applies to all counties with less than 140,000 population. Union county has a population of 140,097.

Camden slightly more than that. Brodhead was influenced to introduce this bill from the fact that Senator Prince has offered a measure in the upper house abolishing the office of register in all counties between 150,000 and 200,000. This would do away with the registership in Passaic and leave only Union and Camden among the counties with less than 200,000 retaining the office.

As the House is Democratic the bill will pass. Its fate in the Senate is doubtful.

BID HIM FAREWELL

Reception for Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Musson on Eve of Their Departure.

PURSE AS TOKEN OF ESTEEM.

Musical Program Rendered and Addresses Are Made by Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss and Others.

Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Musson were tendered a farewell reception at the Temple Baptist church last evening, at which the whole congregation participated. Before the evening was over Mr. and Mrs. Musson received from the hands of Superintendent Frank Stewart on behalf of the congregation, a purse containing a most substantial token of their love and appreciation of the faithful work done by both of them during Mr. Musson's incumbency of the pastorate.

When the purse was handed to the couple, Mr. Smith said that the purse was given as a mark of the love in which the congregation has always held the pastor and his amiable wife. The people feel a distinct loss in Mr. Musson's removal to Meriden, but they wished him and his wife Godspeed in their new field of endeavor.

The pastor was somewhat overcome and for several moments was unable to respond. When he recovered from his surprise he declared that he felt for the first time in his life the want of fitting words with which to express himself. He thanked the congregation for their expression in so substantial a way and urged them to continue in the way and in the faith.

During the evening this program was rendered: Organ voluntary, William Conger; vocal solos, William Smith; Mrs. Charles Windham; piano solo, Bertha Jones; vocal solo, Chas. Stewart, accompanied by Miss Verna Stewart; cornet solo, Whitney Frazee; piano duet, Marie Viebrock and Mrs. William Crow.

Addresses were made by Rev. Dr. John A. Chambliss, superintendent of the Sunday-school, L. W. Randolph and assistant superintendent Frank Stewart. Following the presentation a procession was formed, headed by the deacons of the church and all passed up the aisle and shook hands with Mr. and Mrs. Musson. The committee in charge of the affair was composed of Mrs. Edward Baker, Jr., Mrs. Frank Stewart, Mrs. Clarence Murphy, Mrs. Charles Griffin, Mrs. O. F. Pierson and Mrs. Charles Jeter. Rev. Mr. Musson will lead the regular weekly prayer-meeting this evening and tomorrow the Ladies' Aid Society will hold a reception for him and his wife at the residence of Mrs. Edward Baker, Jr., on Duer street.

Rev. and Mrs. Musson will leove for Meriden, Conn., on Friday.

SCHOOL BOYS DRUNK W.C.T.U.WOMEN CLAIM

Superintendent Ira Travell, of Morristown schools, has had to submit to an interrogation by several of the residents there concerning certain alleged intoxicated pupils. The principal questioners were members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union who claimed to have positive knowledge of intoxicated boy pupils in the schools.

In an interview yesterday, Mr. Travell denied absolutely that any case of intoxication had been known in the schools under his charge.

"Had there been such a case," he said, "I would have known of it directly as it was discovered at the teachers in whose class it occurred would have reported it to me."

Notwithstanding Mr. Travell's denial of the charges against certain pupils the W. C. T. U. claims to have positive evidence of the facts they claim to exist. One of them said yesterday in Morristown that she knew of boys purchasing beer in the saloons of the town, but when pressed for names was unable or unwilling to tell them.

The charges brings to mind a case which occurred in one of the local schools about a year ago. A young boy, scarcely over twelve years old, appeared one day in the class room plainly drunk. Police headquarters was notified and the boy removed to his home. It was found out later that the boy had been given some whiskey by a workman on the premises of the boy's father and that it was not by any means a habit.

MRS. LOUISA HEGEL DIES OF PNEMONIA

Mrs. Louisa Hegel, widow of John Cass, aged 69 years, died this morning at the home of her sister, Mrs. William White, 34 Grove street, following a short illness from pneumonia. She was born in Jersey City and was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hegel, of that place. Following her marriage she resided at Raritan for about twenty years and after her husband's death fifteen years ago, she moved to the borough, making her home with her sister, Mrs. William White.

Mrs. Cass was a member of the Baptist church, Somerville for many years and while living at Raritan was a faithful attendant at the services. She is survived by a sister, Mrs. William White; a brother Frederick Hegel, of Newark; a daughter, Miss Nettie Cass, of the borough, and a step daughter, Mrs. Frank Webster, of Summit avenue. The funeral will be held at the residence of Mrs. White, Friday morning at 10:30 o'clock, and Rev. J. W. Musson, of the Temple Baptist church, will officiate. The burial will be at Mt. Bethel.

CAN JERSEY CENTRAL COMMUTERS RECOVER?

If, as is expected, the Interstate Commerce Commission decides that the commuters on the Pennsylvania Railroad have been overcharged since last July and that they may recover not only the money they have paid the company, but can insist upon the restoration of the old rates, the opinion prevails that commuters along the line of the Jersey Central may recover in like manner their over-expended money and secure for themselves a resoration to the rates prevailing at the time the change was made.

Along the line of the Pennsylvania commuters leagues have been formed for the purpose of fighting the railroad and it would appear that their efforts were about to bear fruit. William L. Ransom, who was engaged as counsel for the objectors, has said that he will at once begin suit against the Pennsylvania to recover the over-payments by his clients just as soon as the expected decision is made public by the Commission.

Along the Jersey Central the rates were incheased in lesser degree than on the Pennsylvania. The commission has recently ruled that if they have power to decide that the increased rates are improper they have also the right to award reparation to the commuters.

The decision, which will be made early next week is awaited with interest.

MR. CASEY'S DEATH

Veteran Undertaker Succumbs to Pleuro-Pneumonia This Morning.

IN BUSINESS HERE 40 YEARS.

Two Sons and Five Daughters Survive Him—Funeral Services to Be Held at St. Mary's Church on Saturday.

Following a short illness from congestion of the lungs and pneumonia primarily, Patrick Casey, joint proprietor of the oldest undertaking business in the city, died this morning at his home on West Third street. He was taken ill Sunday night and from the outset his condition was such as to cause alarm to his family. A consultation of his physicians, Drs. Zeglio and Boone, was held yesterday, when it was decided that his case was hopeless. He retained partial consciousness, however, until shortly before the end which came at 7:10. The members of the family were present at the time.

Mr. Casey was a native of County Limerick, Ireland, but had lived in this country since his eighteenth year. At that time he came to New York with his parents and remained there until a young man. He learned the trunkmaker's trade and when only eighteen years old opened a trunk and men's furnishing store on Sixth avenue, Manhattan. He continued the business for twelve years.

In the meantime Mr. Casey's parents moved to this city and located on a farm on Rahway road, adjoining the well known Henry Clay Randolph place. Mr. Casey followed them in 1871 and after spending a year on the farm established the undertaking business, which he continued until the time of his death. He first located on Park avenue, where the Delgyer jewelry shop is now, having a trunk and furnishing store as a side line. Later he removed to West Front street in a store afterwards absorbed by Edward White's department business. Mr. Casey then returned to Park avenue, where the business remains. Twenty years ago, he took his son John into partnership under the firm name of P. Casey & Son. The concern was appointed as official morgue keepers for four separate terms of three years each.

Mr. Casey was a charter member of local Division No. 4, A. O. H., and was national delegate to the Omaha, Neb., convention in 1895. The successful growth of the organization is in no small measure due to his efforts. He was also a member of Miantonomoh tribe, No. 118, Improved Order of Red Men.

In his private as well as business life, Mr. Casey was greatly liked by all with whom he came in contact. He had a genial, witty disposition and there was always something in his conversation to remember. His word was as good as his bond and, as he himself often remarked, if he had an enemy in the world he was ignorant of the fact.

Mr. Casey is survived by two sons, John and James Casey, and five daughters, Mrs. John J. Gallagher and Mrs. David F. Shea, the Misses Margaret, Nellie and Elizabeth Casey, the last three living at home. Mrs. Casey died some years ago. There are also two brothers, Rev Father ames Casey, a Jesuit priest, located at Baltimore, and Morris Casey, of New York; and two sisters, Mrs. John Lynch, and Miss Honorah Casey, of New York.

The funeral will be held in St Mary's church Saturday morning and burial will be in the family plot in Calvary cemetery, New York.

James Bartley Finney.

James Bartley Finney, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Finney, of 958 West Sixth street, died yesterday and private services were held this morning at the undertaking parlors of A. M. Runyon and Son, on Pak avenue. The burial was in North Plainfield cemetery. Mrs. Finney is the daughter of former Mayor and Mrs. James F. Buckle, of Westervelt avenue.

Complaint Dismissed.

The case of Mrs. John Keiderling against her husband, who she charged with disorderly conduct, was called in the borough court this morning. Mrs. Keiderling failed to appear and the defendant's counsel, City Judge W. G. DeMeza, asked for a dismissal of the complaint, which was granted. Mrs. Keiderling had retained Counselor W. S. Angleman.

Fashion's Most Favored

Millinery Creations

At Our Usual Moderate Prices

So many of them that you will find it an easy task to choose; so beautiful and charming that they will be sure to please and become you; so reasonable that you will be astonished. That is the whole story. For further information you must see the stock. Cold type is all too inadequate with which to give even a fair expression of the attractiveness of this display.

The latest foreign styles as well as the newest New York fancies are included. Visit our Millinery Department. It will settle the question of your Spring Millinery and save you money as well.

Again—Spring Styles Decree New Models in Corsets

This specially arranged Spring Display of over 40 styles of the leading makes affords you an unusual opportunity to choose a model, not alone stylish, but adapted to your own requirements.

When stylists decree a change in the styles of outerapparel a corresponding change is made necessary in the designing of the new season's corset models; you will have a tendency towards a lower bust line, a slight nipping in at the waist in the back only—a long skirt extension with the shortening of the bones in the back cutting out of the skirt in the centre front, lighter boning and straight-line goring. Of course, these new changes are technical descriptions to the average woman. What concerns you most is the question as to whether we can fit you in a model best adapted to your individual requirements. And we say, unhesitatingly, we can afford you a full measure of satisfaction in every sense of the word.

Prices Range from $1.00 to $5.00

We Feature Particularly the Sahlen Corset at $1.00 to $2.00

We have the exclusive selling agency for Plainfield for the sale of this celebrated corset. It is especially adapted to meet the requirements of slender figures. They help wonderfully in rounding out a stylish figure. Ask to see the Sahlin Corset—you will be interested.

BEAUTIFUL JAPAN AND CHINA MATTING—A new fresh stock this season; prices, 40-yard rolls, $8.00 to $15.00.

RUGS! RUGS! RUGS! Just all the best lines represented here in every size; Wilton, Body Brussels, Axminster, Tapestry; Crex and Fibre Matting in great variety of colorings.

LINOLEUM OILCLOTH—From the best inlaid Linoleum; printed in the best wood floor and regular patterns, in largest assortment.

GOLF.

The Brooklyn-Forest Park Golf Club, which uses the public links in Brooklyn, has decided to expend $1,000 or more in fitting up better quarters. In the near future the house on Myrtle avenue, almost directly opposite the present club premises, will be fitted out. This building stands almost in an angle of the links, and has a fine view of the third as well as part of the fourth hole.

Locker accommodations for the men and dressing rooms for women will be installed in the new home, and as the internal fittings are in good order a great deal can be accomplished without much outlay. Outside, the committee has in view the laying out of two lawn tennis courts and a clock putting green.

So far as the course is concerned, the two hundred odd members expect a decided change for the better. The Park Commissioner has declared his intention of doing his utmost toward maintaining a higher standard throughout the coming season. Another point in favor of the golfers lies in the fact that the Forest Park Improvement Association is working with might and main to live up to its name. The association aims at all-around improvements in the park.

With better conditions the club hopes to increase its membership to at least three hundred before the season has advanced. Interest in a competitive way is helped because of the Long Island championship tournament to be held at Forest Park this year the last week in August.

JUDGE MARK SULLIVAN CANDIDATE FOR MAYOR.

Judge Mark Sullivan declared Monday he would accept the Democratic nomination for Mayor of Jersey City. He made this satement:

"If my personal feelings alone were considered, I would deem it a great privilege to continue in the present position to which I was recently appointed by Governor Wilson, but there are other matters to be thought of beyond personal consideration.

"If a majority of the Democratic voters deem it wise to select me as their standard bearer in this contest I shall deem it my duty to respond to their call."

Judge Sullivan is only 33 years old. He was admitted to the bar in 1903, and elected to the Assembly in 1907. He served four terms, introducing many reform measures. Mr. Sullivan was appointed Judge of the Court of Errors and Appeals for a full term, after he had finished the unexpired term of the late Judge Dill by appointment of Governor Fort.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Phillips, of New York city, have returned home after visiting relatives here.

STOKES TART REPLIES TO JOS. FRELINGHUYSEN

Holding that the report of the Senate School Investigating Committee, is a political document drafted in the spirit of "we find no wrong, but there might be," and denouncing as false the references in the report to his connection with bond deals, former Governor Edward C. Stokes today gave out a statement replying in a sweeping manner to the drastic criticism in the report. The former Governor makes counter charges against the chairman of the committee, Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, of Somerset county, with reference to a bond deal and says in this particular: "If he needs a white wash, why not do it without attacking others?"

Mr. Stokes insists that the greatest care was always exercised in the purchase of securities for the State School Fund. He shows that every purchase was by unanimous action and he says that favoritism in such purchases was impossible.

NEW YORK CAPITAL FIRE LOSS $8,000,000

Fire swept, smoke strewn and water drenched, New York state's magnificent $27,000,000 capitol is a partial wreck, the flames starting in the Assembly library, burned away the entire west wing and did damage in four hours estimated at between eight and ten million dollars. The fire started at 3 o'clock this morning. It is believed that the fire was started by a fused electric push button becoming electrified.

The fine State Library, one of the greatest institutions of its kind in the United States and containing invaluable records and relics, was left in complete ruin. The State Librarian estimated that the loss in records alone would be $1,500,000.

The entire west wing had been gutted and all floors and contents destroyed. The Assembly chamber the principal appartment of the north wing, was a scene of ruin. The chandelier had crashed to the floor where it stood a tangle of twisted brass thirty feet high.

The maginficent Perry staircase in the western end was left in sad condition. This work cost $1,500,000, and there was a question of how much of the old staircase would be left after restoration.

YOUNG PEOPLE ENJOY NOVEL AFRICAN DINNER.

The Volunteer Bible class of the Park Avenue Baptist Sunday-school recently conducted a new membership campaign, having two sides, the Reds lost out and as a result gave a dinner to the women last night. It was in the nature of an African "spread" and was the first of its kind given in the city.

Mrs. Gabriel Reid Maguire, who learned how to make the African dishes while on her wedding trip, assisted the young people in their preparation. They had startling names on the menu, but were not nearly so bad as they looked and were enjoyed by all. There were numerous novel African features to the affair, all of which combined to make the dinner a memorable one.

Number 3

THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS INSTITUTE TODAY

Under the auspices of the New Jersey Sunday-school Association, a Sunday-school institute is being conducted today and continuing this evening in the First Baptist church, of New Market. The institute is calculated to assist the superintendents and teachers of the various schools in organizing their work on a systematic scale making the lessons of such interest to the pupils that instead of being a burdensome task it becomes a pleasure to study the Scriptures.

The speakers for this evening are Miss Alice B. Hamlin, of Newark and Louis H. Koehler, who will take on the Intermediate classes and the aim of the Sunday-school. At the end Mr. Koehler will conduct a round table on Sunday-school methods. Devotional exercises will be led by Rev. N. H. Jordan, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, beginning at 7:45 o'clock in the evening. The afternoon session began at 2:30 o'clock.

KILL LOCAL OPTION IN JERSEY SENATE

Speaker Kenny's declaration that the New Jersey Legislature was probably within three weeks of adjournment and horse play with Assemblyman Bunn's bill to prevent treating were features of Monday night's session of the Assembly at Trenton.

Mr. Bunn's measure was humorously pushed aside while the Senate was overthrowing the Anti-Saloon League local option bill, two wet victories coming soon after the heaviest downpour of rain of recent years.

Assemblyman Bunn, who took his bill very seriously, made a long speech against the evils of treating and intemperance. He cited the case of a friend and of his own son who suffered from the habit, and urged that the bill be passed. He said that while he did not believe in prohibition or high license he did believe in no treating.

Nettled by the humorous turn which Assemblymen McLaughlin, Donnelly, Meyer, James and others gave to the debate, Mr. Bunn declared he was surprised that such argument should be made in behalf of something which did everybody harm and nobody good.

Speaker Kenny's prediction of adjournment in three weeks came with his request that the members get down to business and clean the calendar. It may take until Thursday to accomplish this. Next week night sessions are likely.

The House passed the Matthews' bill to permit exempt firemen to peddle without licenses, the Ford bill allowing Hoboken to contribute more generously to St. Mary's Hospital, to which Mayor Gaynor was taken following the Gallagher assault, and the Ford bill allowing Hoboken to build two new fire houses.

The House also passed two important measures inspired by recent catastrophes in New York, Communipaw and Newark. One was the Ford bill giving the State Factory Department power to enforce its orders; and the other was a bill to regulate the storage and transportation of explosives.

Championed only by Senator Gebhardt, and supported by the votes of himself and four others, local option again went down to defeat in the Senate, though none assailed it. Mr. Gebhardt declared he knew he was making a losing battle, but defied any Senator to advance any real reason why it should not be passed. He predicted that the time was coming when the Senators will let the people rule.

He assailed the liquor traffic as the greatest curse of the age, and declared if he could he would wipe it off the earth. He was loudly applauded by the gallery.

OUT OF THE ORDINARY.

With the wholly unparalleled record of having in one lifetime founded no less than 156 newspapers, both daily and weekly, in the Middle West, John S. Harper was gathered to his fathers recently, in Bloomington, Ill.

Twenty-one preachers in Boston and its suburbs have broken down owing to overwork.

It is interesting to note the number and the character of New York's amusements fifty years ago. On March 8, 1856, Blanches' five-act drama, "The Kinghts of the Round Table," was being played at Wallack's, with a farce to open the bill. The performance began at 7:15. "The Winter's Tale" was having a run at Burton's theatre on Charles street. There were four other theatres open, with a variety of spectacular entertainments. The city had eight theatres in all.

Time has been profitably employed by a German statistican to calculate what men and women do when they propose or are proposed to. Thirty-six per cent. of the suitors press the hand of the woman and twenty-four conculde their speech with an embrace. Sixty per cent. of the women sink helpless into their suitors' arms and twenty per cent. blush. The figures are based on the information found in novels.

Kansas City has a track walker who, in the performance of his duties, has walked 132,780 miles in nineteen years. He had a nightly trip of twenty-one miles for sixteen years, and for the past three years has walked twelve miles every night. He has walked track for the Kansas City division of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad during all this time.

The women employed in the Paris theatres to act as ushers and open the boxes have formed a union, but they were sufficiently formidable before. They are usually women of fifty years or so, clumsy and stupid, but avaricious and keen to let no playgoer escape without first paying the customary tip.

A Kentucky barber once bought a mule from a man named Simmons, agreeing to shave Simmons 250 times in payment for the animal. Simmons was shaved at sundry times for a year or more, when the barber found it convenient to pasture the mule on Simmons' land. He finally had to give the mule back to Simmons to pay the pasturage bill.

A Pennsylvania farmer recently gave an employe a cigar which he had kept since July 4, 1863. The cigar was one of two which the farmer took with $15, for the sale of a horse to a Confederate soldier on the retreat from Gettysburg.

HERE AND THERE.

The latest electric invention is the electric carpet for heating rooms. It was originated in Paris. The under side of the new carpet consists of a network of steel wires through which the current is equally distributed in all directions. It is said that the cost of the new form of heating will be less than that of any known system; indeed it is estimated that a room fitted with one of these carpets can be heated at a total cost of a penny an hour.

The Berlin police have with unprecedents liberality granted permission to a young woman to wear male attire. The woman, who is 24, has such a pronounced masculine appearance that when dressed in female clothing she has several times been mistaken for a man in feminine disguise and subjected to annoyance from the police.

She is tall and muscularly built, is without curves, has a masculine stride and the beginning of a mustache. The unfortunate girl suffered so much from the continued persecution to which she was exposed that her health broke down and she had to consult a nerve specialist. On the latter's advice she sent a petition to the police president to be allowed to wear male clothing.

The police president, who had never come across a case of the kind before, took some days to consider his decision and then wrote granting the girl's request, but with the condition that "no distrubance of public order, such as the assembly of crowds, must result."

The history of Job is much older than even the first Babylonian dynasty, says Francois Martin, a French archaeologist, who reports in the Journal Asiatique a discovery he has made of three tablets with cuneiform writing dating back to the time of King Khammurabi, who flourished 2200 B. C.

These tablets tell the story of a man, who, almost in the identical Biblical language, "feared the gods and eschewed evil," and who nevertheless was plagued by a demon until he lay naked and covered with sores among the ashes. When his faith has been tested he is once more raised to health and affluence by the god Marduk.

The similarity between the two stories is remarkable, but M. Martin believes that his find, though very ancient, is not the record of the original conception. If M. Martin is right the story of Job would be about the oldest in the entire history of mankind.

MEDICINE CLOSET.

A large family of children always presuppose the fact that there will undoubtedly be frequent and sudden illness, and a constant succession of hurts of various kinds. So it is very necessary to be well provided for them, and to know just where to find the things one wants in a hurry, says Every Woman's Magazine. An emergency closet should be constructed within easy reach if required in a hurry.

This can be a cupboard about a yard and a half high and perhaps eight inches deep, with a close-fitting door and a fastening that baby hands cannot undo. It is made of cheap pine and stained to match the other woodwork. A shelf runs along the upper part, and on is are kept the medicines needed in sudden illness or hurts, each one carefully labeled. Everything not to be swallowed is in blue bottles. Below this hangs two large roll of clean, soft old linen, and in the other soft flannel.

In the box at the bottom is a flannel foot wrapper about a yard square made double and the edges whipped together. Besides it is a small jar of ground mustard, one of crushed flax-seed and one of ground spices. Each one of the family must know where to find these things.

APPEAL IN EGG CASE.

Trenton, March 29.—The government will take an appeal from the decision of United States Judge Cross, who yesterday afternoon gave a verdict in favor of H. J. Keith & Co., from whom ten tons of eggs were seized by the government recently.

By agreement the case was tried before Judge Cross without a jury. The trial began last week and continued several days. Much evidence was taken, the government trying to prove that the eggs were bad and the defendants that the eggs were good.

Velvet in Paris.

Velvet is the rage today in Paris. All the smart women are wearing short costumes of velvet—ulain, striped or broche—with or without a band of fur at the bottom of the skirt. The favorite colors are dark prune violet, dark slate gray and the blue known as raven or swallow, because it so nearly resembles black.

Soak the wick in strong vinegar and dry it well before you use it; it will then burn both sweet and pleasant and give much satisfaction for the trifling trouble in preparing it.

The Diva's Ruby

By F. Marion Crawford

She pressed her hands to her ears and rose at the same instant. Perhaps it was she, after all, and not her friend who had been brought suddenly to a great cross-road in life. She stood still one moment by the sofa without looking down at her companion; then she left the room abruptly, and shut the door behind her.

Van Torp got up from his seat slowly when she was gone, and went to the window, softly blowing a queer tune between his closed teeth and his open lips, without quite whistling.

"Well—" he said aloud, in a tone of doubt, after a minute or two.

But he said no more, for he was much too reticent and sensible a person to talk to himself audibly even when he was alone, and much too cautious to be sure that a servant might not be within hearing, though the door was shut. He stood before the window nearly a quarter of an hour, thinking that Lady Maud might come back, but as no sound of any step broke the silence he understood that he was not to see her again that day, and he quietly let himself out of the house and went off, not altogether discontented with the extraordinary impression he had made.

Lady Maud sat alone upstairs, so absorbed in her thoughts that she did not hear the click of the lock as he opened and shut the front door.

She was much more amazed at herself than surprised by the offer he had made. Temptation, in any reasonable sense of the word, had passed by her in life, and she had never before understood what it could mean to her.

She was eight-and-twenty years of age and a widow, and now it came to her suddenly in a shape of tremendous strength, through her trusted friend, who had helped her for years to help others. It was real temptation. The man who offered her a million pounds to save miserable wretches from a life of unspeakable horror, could offer twice as much, four, five, or ten millions perhaps. No one knew the vast extent of his wealth, and in an age of colossal fortunes she had often heard his spoken of with the half-dozen greatest. "You can do quite a great deal of good with forty thousand pounds a year."

Van Torp's rough-hewn speech rang through her head, and somehow its reckless grammar gave it strength and made it stick in her memory, word for word. In the drawer of the writing table before which she was sitting there was a little file of letters that meant more to her than anything else in the world, except one dear memory. They were all from rescued women, they all told much the same little story, and it was good to read. She had made many failures, and some terrible ones, which she could never forget; but there were real successes, too, there were over a dozen of them now, and she had only been at work for three years. If she had more money, she could do more; if she had much she could do much; and she knew of one or two women who could help her. What might she not accomplish in a lifetime with the vast sum her friend offered her!—the price of hindering a marriage that was almost sure to turn out badly, perhaps as badly as her own!—the money value of a compromise with her conscience on a point of honor which many women would have thought very vague indeed, if not absurd in such a case. She knew what temptation meant, now, and she was to know even better before long. The prima donna had said that she was going to marry Logotheti chiefly because he insisted on it.

The duel for Margaret's hand had begun; Van Torp had aimed a blow that might well give him the advantage if it went home; and Logotheti himself was quite unaware of the skillful attack that threatened his happiness.

CHAPTER III.

A few days after she had talked with Lady Maud, and before Mr. Van Torp's arrival, Margaret had gone abroad, without waiting for the promised advice in the matter of the wedding gown. With admirable regard for the proprieties she had quite declined to let Logotheti cross the channel with her, but had promised to see him at Versailles, where she was going to stop a few days with her mother's old American friend, the excellent Mrs. Rushmore, with whom she meant to go to Bayreuth to hear "Parsifal" for the first time.

Mrs. Rushmore had disapproved profoundly of Margaret's career, from the first. After Mrs. Donne's death, she had taken the forlorn girl under her protection, and had encouraged her to go on with what she vaguely called her "music lessons." The good lady was one of those dear, old-fashioned, kind, delicate-minded and golden-hearted American women we may never see again, now that "progress" has got civilization by the throat and is squeezing the life out of it. She called Margaret her "chickabiddy" and spread a motherly wing over her, without the least idea that she was rearing a valuable lyric nightingale that would not long be content to trill and quaver unheard.

Immense and deserved success had half reconciled the old lady to what had happened, and after all Margaret had not married an Italian tenor, a Russian prince, or a Parisian composer, the three shapes of man which seemed the most dreadfully immoral to Mrs. Rushmore. She would find it easier to put up with Logotheti than with one of those, though it was bad enough to think of her old friend's daughter marrying a Greek instead of a nice, clean Anglo-Saxon, like the learned Mr. Donne, the girl's father, or the good Mr. Rushmore, her lamented husband, who had been an upright pillar of the church in New York, and the president of a trust company that could be trusted.

After all, though she thought all Greeks must be what she called "designing," the name of Konstantin Logotheti was associated with everything that was most honorable in the financial world, and this impressed Mrs. Rushmore very much.

Logotheti was undoubtedly considered honest, and Mrs. Rushmore made quite sure of it, as well as of the fact that he had an immense fortune.

At Versailles, with its memories of her earlier youth, the prima donna wished to be Margaret Donne again, and to forget for the time that she was the Cordova, whose name was always first on the opera posters in New York, London and Vienna.

She traveled incognito. That is to say, she had sent her first maid and theatrical dresser Alphonsine to see her relations in Nancy for a month, and only brought the other with her; she had, moreover, caused the stateroom on the channel boat to be taken in the name of Miss Donne, and she brought no more luggage to Versailles than could be piled on an ordinary cart, whereas when she had last come from New York her servants had seen 87 pieces put on board the steamer, and a hat-box had been missing after all.

Mrs. Rushmore came out to meet her on the steps in the hot sunshine, portly and kind as ever, and she applied an embrace which was affectionate, yet imposing.

"My dearest child!" she cried. "I was sure I had not quite lost you yet!"

"I hope you will never think you have," Margaret answered, almost quite in her girlish voice of old.

She was very glad to come back. As soon as they were alone in the cool drawing room, Mrs. Rushmore asked her about her engagement in a tone of profound concern, as though it were a grave bodily ailment which might turn out to be fatal.

"Don't take it so seriously," Margaret answered with a little laugh; "I'm not married yet!"

The elderly face brightened.

"Do you mean to say that—that there is any hope?" she asked eagerly.

Margaret laughed now, but in a gentle and affectionate sort of way.

"Perhaps, just a little! But don't ask me, please. I've come home to forget everything for a few weeks."

"Thank heaven!" ejaculated Mrs. Rushmore in a tone of deep relief. "Then if—if he should call this afternoon, or even to-morrow—may I tell them to say that you are out?"

She was losing no time; and Margaret laughed again, though she put her head a little on one side with an expression of doubt.

"I can't refuse to see him," she said, "though really I would much rather be alone with you for a day or two."

"My darling child!" cried Mrs. Rushmore, applying another embrace, "you shall! Leave it to me!"

Mrs. Rushmore's delight was touching, for she could almost feel that Margaret had come to see her quite for her own sake, whereas she had pictured the "child," as she still called the great artist, spending most of her time in carrying on inaudible conversations with Logotheti under the trees in the lawn, or in the most remote corners of the drawing room; for that had been the accepted method of courtship in Mrs. Rushmore's young days, and she was quite ignorant of the changes that had taken place since then.

Half an hour later, Margaret was in her old room upstairs writing a letter, and Mrs. Rushmore had given strict orders that until further notice Miss Donne was "not at home" for any one at all, no matter who might call.

"My Dearest Child!" She Cried.

When the letter already covered ten pages, Margaret laid down her pen and without the least pause or hesitation tore the sheets to tiny bits, inking her fingers in the process because the last one was not yet dry.

"What a wicked woman I am!" she exclaimed aloud, to the very great surprise of Potts, her English maid, who was still unpacking in the next room, the door being open.

"Beg pardon, ma'am?" the woman asked, putting in her head.

"I said I was a wicked woman," Margaret answered, rising, "and what's more, I believe I am. But I quite forgot you were there, Potts, or I probably should not have said it aloud."

"Yes, ma'am," answered Potts meekly, and she went back to her unpacking.

Margaret had two maids, who were oddly suited to her two natures. She had inherited Alphonsine from her friend the famous retired soprano, Mme. Bonanni, and the cadaverous, clever, ill-tempered, garrulous dresser was as necessary to Cordova's theatrical existence as paint, limelight, wigs and an orchestra. The English Potts, the meek, silent, busy and intensely respectable maid, continually made it clear that her mistress was Miss Donne, an English lady, and that Mme. Cordova, the celebrated singer, was what Mr. Van Torp would have called "only a side-show."

The letter that had been torn up before it was finished was to have gone to Lady Maud, but Margaret herself had been almost sure that she would not send it, even while she was writing.

She had written that she had done very wrong in engaging herself to Logotheti; that was the "wickedness" she accused herself of, repeating the self-accusation to her astonished maid, because it was a sort of relief to say the words to somebody. She had written that she did not really care for him in that way, that when he was near she could not resist a sort of natural attraction he had for her, but that as soon as he was gone she felt it no longer and she wished he would not come back; that her ideal of a husband was so and so, and this and that—and here fiction had begun, and she had put a stop to it by destroying the whole letter instead of crossing out a few lines—which was a pity; for if Lady Maud had received it, she would have told Mr. Van Torp that he needed no help from her since Margaret herself asked no better than to be freed from the engagement.

Logotheti did not come out to Versailles that afternoon, because he was plentifully endowed with tact where women were concerned, and he applied all the knowledge and skill he had to the single purpose of pleasing Margaret. But before dinner he telephoned and asked to speak with her, and this she could not possibly refuse. Besides, the day had seemed long, and though she did not wish for his presence she wanted something—that indescribable, mysterious something which disturbed her and made her feel uncomfortable when she felt it, but which she missed when she did not see him for a day or two.

"How are you?" asked his voice, and he ran on without waiting for an answer. "I hope you are not very tired after crossing yesterday. I came by Boulogne—decent of me, wasn't it? You must be sick of seeing me all the time, so I shall give you a rest for a day or two. Telephone whenever you think you can bear the sight of me again, and I'll be with you in 35 minutes. I shall not stir from home in this baking weather. If you think I'm in mischief you're quite mistaken, dear lady, for I'm up to my chin in work!"

"I envy you," Margaret said, when he paused at last. "I've nothing on earth to do, and the piano here is out of tune. But you're quite right, I don't want to see you a little bit, and I'm not jealous, nor suspicious, nor anything disagreeable. So there!"

"How nice of you!"

"I'm very nice," Margaret answered with laughing emphasis. "I know it. What sort of work are you doing? It's only idle curiosity, so don't tell me if you would rather not! Have you got a new railway in Brazil, or an overland route to the other side of beyond?"

"Nothing so easy! I'm brushing up my Tartar."

"Brushing up what? I didn't hear."

"Tartar—the Tartar language—T-a-r—" he began to spell the word.

"Yes, I hear now," interrupted Margaret. "But what in the world is the use of knowing it? You must be awfully hard up for something to do!"

"You can be understood from Constantinople to the Pacific ocean if you can speak Tartar," Logotheti answered in a matter-of-fact tone.

"I daresay! But you're not going to travel from Constantinople to the Pacific ocean—"

"I might. One never can tell what one may like to do."

"Oh, if it's because Tartar is useful 'against the bites of sharks,'" answered Margaret, quoting Alice, "learn it by all means!"

"Besides, there are all sorts of people in Paris. I'm sure there must be some Tartars. I might meet one, and it would be amusing to be able to talk to him."

"Nonsense! Why should you ever meet a Tartar? How absurd you are!"

"There's one with me now—close beside me, at my elbow."

"Don't be silly, or I'll ring off."

"If you don't believe me, listen!"

He said something in a language Margaret did not understand, and another voice answered him at once in the same tongue. Margaret started slightly and bent her brows with a puzzled and displeased look.

"Is that your teacher?" she asked with more interest in her tone than she had yet betrayed.

"Yes."

"I begin to understand. Do you mind telling me how old she is?"

"It's not 'she,' it's a young man. I don't know how old he is. I'll ask him if you like."

Again she heard him speak a few incomprehensible words, which were answered very briefly in the same tongue.

"He tells me he is 20," Logotheti said. "He's a good-looking young fellow. How is Mrs. Rushmore? I forgot to ask."

"She's quite well, thank you. But I should like to know—"

"Will you be so very kind as to remember me to her, and to say that I hope to find her at home the day after to-morrow?"

"Certainly. Come to-morrow if you like. But please tell me how you happened to pick up that young Tartar. It sounds so interesting! He has such a sweet voice."

There was no reply to this question, and Margaret could not get another word from Logotheti. The communication was apparently cut off. She rang up the central office and asked for his number again, but the young woman soon said that she could get no answer to the call, and that something was probably wrong with the instrument of number one-hundred-and-six-thirty-seven.

Margaret was not pleased, and she was silent and absent-minded at dinner and in the evening.

"It's the reaction after London," she said with a smile, when Mrs. Rushmore asked if anything was the matter. "I find I am more tired than I knew, now that it's all over."

Mrs. Rushmore was quite of the same opinion, and it was still early when she declared that she herself was sleepy and that Margaret had much better go to bed and get a good night's rest.

But when the prima donna was sitting before the glass and her maid was brushing out her soft brown hair, she was not at all drowsy, and though her eyes looked steadily at their own reflection in the mirror, she was not aware that she saw anything.

"Potts," she said suddenly, and stopped.

"Yes, ma'am?" answered the maid with meek interrogation, and without checking the regular movement of the big brush.

"Potts," she began again, "you are not very imaginative, are you?"

"No, ma'am," the maid answered, because it seemed to be expected of her, though she had never thought of the matter.

"Do you think you could possibly be mistaken about a voice, if you didn't see the person who was speaking?"

"In what way, ma'am?"

"I mean, do you think you could take a man's voice for a woman's at a distance?"

"Oh, I see!" Potts exclaimed. "As it might be, at the telephone?"

"Well—at the telephone, if you like, or anywhere else. Do you think you might?"

"It would depend on the voice, ma'am," observed Potts, with caution.

"Of course it would," assented Margaret rather impatiently.

"Well, ma'am, I'll say this, since you ask me. When I was last at home I was mistaken in that way about my own brother, for I heard him calling to me from downstairs, and I took him for my sister Milly."

"Oh! That's interesting!" Margaret smiled. "What sort of voice has your brother? How old is he?"

"He's eight and twenty, ma'am; and as for his voice, he has a sweet counter tenor, and sings nicely. He's a song-man at the Coal-hole, ma'am."

"Really! How nice! Have you a voice, too? Do you sing at all?"

"Oh, no, ma'am," answered Potts in a deprecating tone. "One in the family is quite enough!"

Margaret vaguely wondered why, but did not inquire.

"You are quite sure that it was your brother who was speaking, I suppose," she said.

"Oh, yes, ma'am! I looked down over the banisters, and there he was!"

Are the Statements of Plainfield Citizens Not More Reliable Than Those of Utter Strangers?

This is a vital question.

It is fraught with interest to Plainfield.

It permits of only one answer.

It cannot be evaded or ignored.

A Plainfield citizen speaks here.

Speaks for the welfare of Plainfield.

A citizen's statement is reliable.

An utter stranger's doubtful.

Home proof is the best proof.

Mrs. Lydia A. Emmons, 29 Stone street, Plainfield, N. J., says: "I received great benefit from Doan's Kidney Pills when suffering from a dull ache through my back and consequently I do not hesitate to endorse this excellent remedy. Doan's Kidney Pills gave me relief after other medicines had failed and after I had suffered for years. I feel that my experience was a thorough test of this preparation and I must give Doan's Kidney Pills the credit for being a remedy that lives up to representations."

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

This year that best of all roaring musical farce spectacles "McFadden's Flats," comes to the Plainfield theatre tomorrow matinee and night, with everything rearranged, sparkling and rejuvenated. The management has replaced everything heretofore used with entirely new up to date material and the consequence is a brand new and thoroughly finished farce comedy spectacular review of the latest fads and funny things of the day.

In writing of the desirable combinations of good plays and good acting, one cannot forget the coming of Ethel Barrymore and her company, to the Plainfield theatre Saturday night, when the actress is to be presented by Charles Frohman in the double bill of plays by J. M. Barrie, "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire" and "The Twelve Pound Look."

The Black Patti Musical Comedy Company, which is composed entirely of this race of people, is now in its fifteenth consecutive season, and is said by the press and public everywhere to be one of the best musical companies on the road. The book and music of "A Trip to Africa," is by Jolly John Larkins, one of our foremost colored comedians, is a veritable mine of comedy and sweet music of the whistly kind. The Black Patti Company is the attraction at the Plainfield theatre next Tuesday, April 4.

Barn Destroyed by Fire.

ADD TO TRUSTEES

Anti-Tuberculosis League Increases Board From Fifteen to Fifty.

BY-LAWS WERE AMENDED.

New Executive Committee to Be Elected—Enlargement Will Increase Scope of Work—A Circular Letter.

The stormy weather of last night kept down the attendance at the meeting of the Plainfield and North Plainfield Anti-Tuberculosis League in the Babcock building, a bare quorum being present. However, the business for which the meeting was called was transacted and the proposed changes in the by-laws enacted. The change which has particular effect on the proposed campaign against tuberculosis increases the number of trustees from fifteen to fifty. The old board of fifteen was re-elected and the additional members to the number of thirty-five were added to the list.

William S. Tyler, president of the society, was in the chair and after the changes in the by-laws were confirmed, he was authorized to appoint a nominating committee which will in turn appoint an executive committee to actively prosecute the work. The former committee will be appointed later.

All of those added to the Board of Trustees will receive copies of a circular letter today notifying them of their appointment and stating the objects of the change.

The letter follows:

"At the meeting of the Anti-Tuberculosis League of Plainfield and North Plainfield held last evening, you were duly elected a member of the enlarged Board of Trustees to serve for the current year. The enlargement of the board is the society's spontaneous response to a demand for broader representation among the various activities of the city, who have supported the campaign against tuberculosis. The wide public interest in the work is quite properly entitled to recognition of a kind which will make the society in the truest possible sense an organization of the citizens, whose affair it really is, and in whose hands the control and management rightfully belongs.

"An executive committee will be elected at the first meeting of the new board so that the details of the business may not devolve unnecessarily upon the larger board. In this way it will be possible for those to be trustees who might otherwise hesitate to assume new duties, and who will now find it possible to accept. The executive committee will meet every month and thereby relieve the larger Board of Trustees of the necessity of holding more than three meetings a year.

"It is earnestly hoped that you will find it conventient to accept the election."

This list includes the fifteen old members of the board and the new: George L. Babcock, Dr. F. E. DuBois, Leighton Calkins, E. F. Feickert, Hugh F. Fox, John W. Gavett, Dr. B. VanD Hedges, G. M. Holstein, Dr. F. J. Hughes, Mrs. S. B. Joost, J. P. Murray, Dr. W. H. Murray, Miss Mabelle C. Phillips, Miss G. Smith, W. S. Tyler, William H. Abbott, Rev. B. M. Bogan, Mrs. Allan Cowperthwait, H. L. DeForest, J. Hervey Doane, R. Henry Depew, Charles A. Flynn, George H. Frost, George M. Griffin, Captain S. A. Hewitt, Peter B. Hodge, Miss. M. C. Holly, Mrs Frank W. Jones, Dr. Edward S. Krans, H. C. Krebs, Allen B. Laing. James T. MacMurray, Harry W. Marshall, Mrs. Henry M. Maxson, Mrs. George P. Mellick, Rev. William H. Miller, Alexander Milne, Ralph L. Morrow, Judge William Newcorn, Rev. A. C. Nickerson, John O'Brien, Jr., H. H. Pond, Mrs. Champlain L. Riley, Ernest L. Ransome, Mrs. Annie Slevin, Newton B. Smalley, D. E. Titsworth, William F. Townley, C. B. Tyler, D. W. Taylor, Rev. PUBLIC TO BE HEARD ON THE GERAN BILL

A public hearing will be held on the Geran primary and election bill next Tuesday at 2 o'clock. This announcement was made by Senator Bradley, chairman of the Elections Committee on Tuesday, in the Senate at Trenton. It is expected that the hearing will attract to Trenton the largest crowd that has yet appeared for or against a measure, so keen is the interest in Mr. Geran's bill.

"It is said that the people want this particular election bill," declared Senator Bradley. "Well, if the people want it they will demonstrate it. I believe that the Senate Elections Committee should do everything in its power to bring about a good, clean, working election law, and the committee is working to that end. The hearing will illuminate many things, and it is likely to be an important one. The people can speak and we can hear what is thought of the proposition from all sides. The committee is seeking all the light it can get."

LAST OF SERIES ON THE BOY PROBLEM

Rev. Franklin K. Mathiews will deliver the last of a series of five lectures to mothers of boys at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'cloc. The topic will be "Money and Morals or, the Place of Prizes and Rewards in Securing Obedience." A synopsis of the lecture follows:

1st. The right kind of obedience, the ethical and religious standard; interest must be provoked, the educational ideal; sentimental puritanism versus sentimental paganism.

2nd. God's method of winning men to the highest and holiest, Abraham and Jacob, Job and Jesus; we must distinguish between "prizes" and "rewards," first that which is natural and then that which is spiritual.

3rd. Prizes must not be used indiscriminately—that which is of greatest value in provoking the interest of the sensory-minded boy is of the least worth in provoking the interest of the individual in the group; virtue as its own reward—the delight of duty and the duty of delight.

At the close of the lecture, a selected list of books in the public library for the guidance of parents in the moral and religious training of children (boys and girls) in the home, will be distributed. Mr. Mathiews suggests these books as a basis for a course of reading on the subjects already discussed in his lectures. One group suggests the manuals to be used in developing character by means of the things which boys enjoy. This list consists of books on play and games, manual training and crafts, nature-study and gardening, reading and Sunday occupations.

All mothers and teachers are invited to attend the lecture.

CODDINGTON APPEARS BEFORE SCHOOL SUP'T

Horace Coddington, of Warren township, who notified H. C. Krebs, Somerset county superintendent of schools, that he proposed contesting the recent school election in that township, was present this afternoon at a meeting called by Mr. Krebs at Mt. Bethel, at which time the members of the Board of Education appeared to consider the matter.

Mr. Coddington maintained that the election was illegal and that two members chosen were not eligible for office. He also alleged that the election was illegal because the secretary cast the ballot at the meeting for the one ticket and that the polls were not kept open for one hour as required by law.

At the school meeting, Adam Betzold, Augustus Schumaker and Oliver Kline were elected trustees for three years and Herman Meyers for one year to succeed Jacob Reinman, who died. It is said that the polls were kept open a half-hour, during which time the secretary, J. V. Brockway cast the ballot for the ticket. It is further declared that when Horace Coddington offered his ticket it was refused, being told that it was too late. On these grounds Mr. Coddington is contesting the election.

CANDIDATE FOR LOCAL PASTORATE

Rec. E. C. Conover, pastor of the Baptist church, at Pemberton, who has been invited to preach at the Temple Baptist church, next Sunday as a candidate, is a graduate ofCrozier Theological Seminary, being a senior at that institution there when Rev. J. W. Musson was a junior. He has been out of the seminary nine years. He has been in his present position about five years. Rev. Dr. J. C. Buchanan, of Duer street, was formerly pastor of the same church.

Mr. Conover desires to get in a larger field. The population of Pemberton is gradually diminishing and the possibility of increasing the membership of the church is not very good. For this reason Mr. Conover would like to get into a more promising field of labor. He is about forty years of age, married and has one daughter.

TO SEND BACK TEAM AT NO. 4 FIRE HOUSE

Councilman Duncan W. Taylor, chairman of the councilmanic fire committee, instructed Chief T. O. Doane, at a meeting of the committee, last night, to send the team of horses now at the Netherwood fire house, back to the owners, Fiss, Doer & Carroll, New York, just as soon as they are able to be removed. One of the animals is now quite ill and it will probably be a few days before the horses can be sent to New York.

This action is the result of an examination which showed that the team will not meet requirements. They were secured from Fiss, Doer & Carroll, as all other horses have been, with the understanding that after a trial they could be returned if not satisfactory.

Councilman W. W. Wilson, who is also a member of the fire committee, purchased a team of horses this week from L. F. Hersh & Brothers, Elizabeth, and that firm is now waiting to hear from the committee as to the time of delivery. When the New York horses arrived here they were promptly hitched to the apparatus at the Netherwood fire house and given a trial. It was remarked at the time that one of the team did not act just right, but this was said to be due to the fact that it was probably tired from its trip and not being acclimated, would eventually come around all right. The following day a veterinary was called in and it is said found that one of the horses was very ill having a high temperature. This fact was reported to Mr. Taylor and he ordered the team returned to the owners.

The rest of last evening was devoted by the committee to a discussion of department matters, including hose, and minor matters such as proposed repairs and improvements to the different houses; also the advisability of purchasing an automobile fire apparatus. The committee seems to favor an auto machine and if a sufficient amount of money can be obtained this year in the appropriation it is possible that such a machine will be purchased.

Mrs. Preston B. Goodfellow, of Netherwood avenue, who has been critically ill for several months, shows little sign of improvement.

TO GIVE A COMEDY

Bronson Howard's "Henrietta" to be Presented in May by Park Players.

AT THE PLAINFIELD THEATRE.

For the Benefit of the Plainfield Anti-Tuberculosis League—May 12 and 13th Being the Dates.

The Park Comedy Club will present Bronson Howard's four-act comedy, the "Henrietta," at the Plainfield theatre Friday and Saturday, May 12 and 13, for the benefit of The Anti-Tuberculosis League of Plainfield and North Plainfield. The play, in which Robson and Crane starred, had a phenomenal run and has always been onsidered one of the best comedies of recent years. It is full of genuine, wholesome fun, and those who remember having seen it years ago, will welcome this opportunity to see it again with a local cast of exceptional merit.

F. C. Patterson, who has coached the club in other successful productions, has again been secured for the forthcoming play, and this will insure a finished performance in every detail. The cast, which is announced today, includes all of the old favorites and some new faces, who will add to the strength of the production. The cast:

Nicholas VanAlsyne, Old Nick in the Street, Charles H. Lyman; Dr. Parke Wainwright, E. P. Sharetts; Nicholas VanAlstyne, Jr., DeWitt Brokaw; Bertie VanAlstyne, his brother, a lamb, Alson M. Abbott; Lord Arthur Trelawney, another, John Valiant; the Rev. Dr. Murray Hilton, a shepherd, Laurens H. VanBuren; Watson Flint, a broker, William Flanders; Musgrave, an old clerk, William T. Pelletier; Mrs. Cornelia Opdyke, a widow, Mrs. Alson M. Abbott; Mrs. Rose VanAlstyne, Jr., Miss Grace Isabel Ashwell; Agnes, her sister, in love with Bertie, Mrs. Charles Barlow; Lady Mary Trelawney, old VanAlstyne's daughter, Miss Annie Ramsey Johnson.

The play, which tells a story of Wall street, and abounds in exciting and amusing incidents, will be presented with the same faithfulness as to detail which marked its long run in New York city. Rehearsals are now being held and those in charge say that the progress made indicates the best performance yet given by the comedy club in this city.

Mr. Lyman's part is the one taken by W. H. Crane, "Nicholas VanAlstyne;" while Alson M. Abbott's part, that of "Bertie the Lamb," is the one taken by Stuart Robson, and it is around these parts that the whole play centers.

MISS STILES GIVES A CHARMING PARTY

MissThyra Stiles, of Sandford avenue, gave an informal but delightful "Easter" party at her home yesterday afternoon. It was intended primarily for her classmates at the Plainfield High School, twenty of them being in attendance. A color scheme of yellow and white was maintained throughout, not only in decoration but in everything connected with the affair, even to refreshments. These included a yellow and white salad, yellow ice cream and white cake. The idea was distinctly unique.

The guests spent most of the time in playing progressive "500" and it afforded much amusement. The first prize, a handsome bouquet of cut flowers, was won by Miss Margaret Hutchinson, and the second, a rabbit filled with Easter eggs, was awarded Miss Mabel Foster. The refreshments were served at the conclusion of play.

Those in attendance besides the hostess were the Misses Margaret Hutchinson, Ruth Wean, Elsie Bird, Louise Bird, Madeline Durar, Celestine Waldron, Anne Johnson, Margaret Vail, Kathleen Phillips, Ruth Western, Helen Campbell, Hannah Bingaman, Mabel Foster, Leila Dewey, Marguerite Shotwell, Emily McCrea, Francis Newell, Margaret Leggett and Elizabeth Hardwicke, the last named of Somerville.

Entertained "500" Club.

Mrs. Margaret Wilson, of Grove street, entertained the Tuesday night "500" club at her home Tuesday night. Mr. and Mrs. Adam Seals won the first prizes, Mrs. Fred Sandford the second women's, and V. G. Tingley the second men's. At the conclusion of play an hour was spent informally during which refreshments were served.

Miss Margaret Smith, of Duer street, is detained at home by a severe attack of the mumps.

HIS CHECK BOGUS, YOUTH IS ARRESTED

On complaint of J. K. Roundey, of the Endress Company, West Front street, Alpheus Miller, a colored youth is locked up at Police headquarters charged with having uttered a bogus check for $12 on a local banking institution. When arraigned this morning before Judge William G. DeMeza he refused to plead to the charge and asked for time to secure counsel. The hearing was set down for 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Miller is engaged as butler in the home of a prominent resident and has always borne a good reputation. It would appear, however, that he has succumbed to a passion for gambling and when his funds ran low resorted to the expedient of a check to defray his growing expenses. Mr. Roundey cashed the check, but when it was presented at the bank, payment was refused.

Another check for $5 was cashed by Schreiner Bros., druggists, on Tuesday afternoon and it is possible that there are others.

Miller said this morning that he did not understand why the checks were protested as, so he declares, there were ample funds in the bank to meet them.

MATERIAL FAULTY ALEX KANE CLAIMS

Judge William Newcorn reserved decision this morning in the suit brought by Alexander Kane against Albert W. Booth & Bros., a lumber concern doing business in Bayonne. Mr. Kane sued the lumber firm to recover the value of new roofing put upon his property on East Third stree with an additional amount for damages resulting from leaks which Kane claimed resulted from faulty material.

The defense claimed that the leaks were caused by protruding nails left in the old roofing and that Kane was responsible for the trouble caused by putting one covering over another.

The trial occupied the time of the court from 10 o'clock until shortly before 2 o'clock. Francis J. Blatz represented Mr. Kane and Robert Newton Crane appeared for the defendant. Mr. Blatz based the suit on breach of warranty.

VERDICT FOR COLLIER ON RETRIAL OF CAUSE

In the District Court this morning Judge William Newcorn rendered his decision in the case of Paul Collier against Louis DeBrigard, giving judgment for the plaintiff for $60. This case was first tried before Judge Newcorn last summer and his verdict at that time was practicallly a nonsuit. J. Henry Crane, counsel for the plaintiff, was not satisfied with the decision of the court here and carried an appeal to the Supreme Court. After several months the Supreme Court decided that the legal points of exception submitted by Counsellor Crane were well taken and ordered a re-trial which resulted as noted.

M. Collier sued Louis DeBrigard for $73 alleged money loaned and wages due. There were several delicate questions involved in the trial including those of veracity and the state of employment. The verdict of this morning is a triumph for Mr. Crane.

THE Y. M. H. A. CONDUCTS A DELIGHTFUL DANCE.

The Young Men's Hebrew Association conducted a delightful dance in Sebring's Hall, last night, the attendance being quite large despite the disagreeable weather. Sixty-five couples enjoyed the program of two-steps, waltzes and square dances, music for which was provided by Naylor's orchestra. Arthur H. Richards acted as floor manager in a very efficient manner.

The proceeds from the affair will be added to the fund for the Hebrew school which the Y. M. H. A. conducts in its building on Grove street.

The committee which arranged and had charge of the dance was composed of the following: A. H. Richards, chairman; Samuel Rothberg, secretary; M. Bernstein, treasurer; Jacob Abrams, Abe Victorson, Leo Ziesel, L. Goldstein, Harry Siegel, and Morris L. Abrams.

Memorial Service Postponed.

The memorial service which it was intended to hold last evening at the Park Avenue Baptist church, was postponed until a latter date owing to the inclemency of the weather. About forty members attended the service which was the regular midweek prayer meeting.

SALVATION ARMY NEEDS $2,000 YET

The committee of citizens having in charge the raising of $7,000 with which to wipe out the debt of the local Salvation Army corps reported this morning an additional subscription of $500 which brings the total up to $4,000 so far subscribed.

As $2,500 of this amount is subscribed conditionally Captain Hewitt and the whole corps hope that during the remaining ten days the full amount will be subscribed.

The anniversary date is April 9, Easter Sunday, and on that day Commander Eva Booth will speak twice in this city. The big meeting will be held in the First Baptist church in the evening and promises to be one of the largest ever held in the city for the purpose. Several accredited agents are assisting the Army by soliciting subscriptions each of whom is provided with the necessary blanks for signature.

LECTURE ON AFRICA BY REV.DR.JOS.CLARK

Rev. Dr. Joseph Clark, who for the past thirty years has been one of the leading Baptist missionaries in Central Africa, located on the Congo, delivered an illustrated lecture at the First Baptist church, last night, telling of his work in Africa, which has been a remarkable one in many respects.

More than one hundred exceptionally fine pictures, taken by Dr. Clark, were shown, and they gave the congregation an unusual idea of mission work in Africa during the past quarter of a century. Dr. Clark's work has been chiefly among the cannibals and according to his words and his pictures he has met with great success. The contrast between the unconverted and converted Africans, was truly remarkable, and it aroused those present to a greater interest in this paticular mission field.

During a short session, two young converts came before the church and were received for baptism by the pastor, Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss.

DEDICATION SERVICE AT ST. PETER'S CHURCH

The Church Council of St. Peter's German Lutheran church has issued invitations to the dedication services of the beautiful altar and window, a memorial to a sainted member, Mrs. Anna M. Heins, who died after much bodily suffering, on October 4, 1909, in the 71st year of her age. Mrs. Heins was the mother of Mrs. Chas. Moldenke and Mrs. Richard Moldenke, who have provided the altar and window.

Attention is also called in the invitation to the munificent donation by a fellow-member, Mrs. Dorothea Taylor, mother of Mrs. Hiram Woodruff, of Westervelt avenue, of the entire carpeting of the church and altar platform, greatly enhancing the beauty of this house of worship.

The dedication services, with special music, will be held Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock, and will be in charge of Rev. John Duerschner, pastor. The services will be in German.

THAT SILVER FOUND

But Who Had it for Two Years and Who Put it in Sergeant's Desk.

POLICE DEPARTMENT MYSTERY.

Mrs. Gertrude Fenner Recovers Her Missing Property But There Will Be an Official Investigation Made.

The question as to what became of two silver soup spoons and a silver butter knife, which were borrowed by the police from Mrs. Gertrude Fenner, of Ravine road, two years ago, has been partially solved. Chief of Police Kiely telephoned Mayor G. W. V. Moy last night that the silverware had been found in the signal desk at police headquarters. Who took the silver, where it has been for two years and how it came to be placed where found still remain mysteries. It is understood that the three pieces of silverware were found by Sergeant H. L. Overbaugh and the fact was reported to Chief Kiely, who informed the Mayor.

The Councilmanic police board was to have held a meeting last night for the purpose of starting the investigation regarding the silverware, but the fact that it had been found and so reported, upset the plans. Mayor Moy when questioned on the subject today said:

"The fact that the silverware has been found will not change my plans for an investigation. I propose to sift the matter to the bottom and ascertain all the details, if possible."

It is understood that a search of headquarters was made for the missing articles, but they could not be found. Now they suddenly come back without any explanation. Although Chief Kiely states that the three articles are worth about $6, Mrs. Fenner prized them highly for their associations. They belonged to a set of old silverware which had been left to her and for this reason regretted the loss of the articles.

About two years ago there was a burglary at the home of Mrs. Fenner, when several articles were taken including some silverware. She claims that a member of the police department called at her home, obtained three pieces of the silverware to assist in the identification of the stolen articles. She had never seen the three pieces borrowed after they were taken from her home and she finally made a complaint to Mayor Moy after repeated unsuccessful attempts to recover her property.

Chief Kiely had told all the men to appear at headquarters yesterday for the purpose of finding out something about the missing silver. An hour or so before the time set, the goods were found.

"McFADDEN'S FLATS" AT THE THEATRE TONIGHT.

Laughter as a tonic beats all the best patent medicines. It drives away dull care, chases away the blues and makes despondency look like "thirty cents.' Laughter in large chunks will be on tap at the Plainfield theatre tonight as "McFadden's Flats" will be the caper.

The piece is successful by its rapid continuity of amusing scenes and laughable situations, to say nothing of the splendid list of specialties and pretty music with its catchy songs, big chorus of vivacious maidens, comedians, dancers and singers who know how to entertain.

BELL-HOP TERROR TO SLEEPY BALL PLAYERS.

One of the bellboys at the hotel in Lakewood has been signed by Captain Lew McAllister to awaken the Indians every morning at 7:30 o'clock. The colored lad has an effective style in doing the arousing stunt and the Braves are compelled to slip from under the sheets once the lad starts out on his mission. Not a single Warrior is forgotten. When the bell hop starts out he raps on the door with a small hammer and after hearing a response says:

"Captain McAllister desires that yo' get up. Now put one foot on the floor so I can hear you. Now put the other foot out. Now walk across the flo'."

When these instructions have been followed the bell boy will state that breakfast is ready in the dining-room and go on to the next room.

Pencil Lighted by Electricity.

Many busy people will welcome a pencil with which they may write in the dark, says a London exchange. It is a useful possession to motorists and doctors among other individuals. The pencil has an electric light in it which illuminates successfully a tablet or sheet of notepaper, thus enabling the owner to see what is doing, although darkness may be all around him. Illuminated walking sticks are made also, and the new lanterns for country folk, if not so picturesque as those of the old pattern, are very effective.

FIRE ESCAPE MEASURE UNANIMOUSLY PASSED.

Assemblyman Balentine, when his bill, House 431, to regulate factory fire escapes, came up for final passage yesterday, had only to recall the High street fire in Newark and that of last Saturday in New York to secure a unanimous vote on it.

The bill contains stringent regulations and places power of enforcement in the hands of the State Labor Department.

Mr. Balentine explained that the bill had been drawn up in the interests of both employers and employes and with the prime purpose of protecting human life.

IN BEHALF OF TRUE WEIGHTS

The Senate passed Tuesday the Prince bill establishing a State department of weights and measures and fixing a system of standards. Senator Nichols declared that the object of the bill was to create a lot of fat offices. His vote was the only one registered against the bill.

The Senate also passed House 129, allowing deputy fish and game wardens a fee of $5 for every successful conviction of violation of the fish and game laws. House 267, passed by the Senate, gives the Board of Fish and Game Commissioners authority to lease or purchase lands for the propagation of game and fish.

Other bills passed by the Senate were:

Senate 191, to correct a technicality in the Orphans' Court act and to make it no longer necessary for surrogates, except upon written request of an interested person, to report the failure of any executive, etc., to file an inventory or make accounting.

Senate 199, amending act relating to cities of less than 12,000 so that interest on assessments levied for improvements shall be payable only from the time when benefit accrued to property owners.

Senate 200, providing that when two or more municipalities are separated by any public road or highway, the centre line of the same shall be the dividing line between such municipalities for the purpose of maintaining, macadamizing and improving such road.

House 104, authorizing towns to establish the office of comptroller.

The Senate defeated the following bills:

House 153 (Brown), fixing salaries of firemen in all cities except those of the first class, and designed especially for East Orange.

House 109, fixing the salaries of police officers in second class cities.

House 159, permits the retirement of city employes on pension after thirty years of continuous service if they are fifty-five years old. The provision which killed the last named measure was the fifty-five years age provision. Many of the Senators thought that employes should not be pensioned at fifty-five if they were still in good health. The vote was 9 to 9. The other two bills were lost because of the desire of the Senators to allow municipalities to settle their own affairs.

AMERICAN CITIZENS' INTERESTS IN MEXICO.

The interests of American citizens in the other countries are very small compared to those in Mexico. For half a century Americans have been investing in Mexico, until at the present time there is a billion dollars of American money in railroads, mines, forests and ranches south of the Rio Grande. American capital has been encouraged by President Diaz, and the lives of American citizens have been protected by the strong government he has maintained. Liberal concessions have been granted, but, while they have encouraged Americans to locate and invest in Mexico, they have also created a condition which will tend to increase our problem when Diaz is no more. The liberality toward Americans has created a hatred of them by the classes which have been kept down and ruled by the iron hand of the dictator-President. They only await the time when they will have the opportunity, not only to destroy the government which Diaz has built up, but also the American whom he has favored.

Revolutionists, even if this feeling against Americans did not exist, are no respecters of the property rights of foreigners. The money and other property owned by Americans will be as useful to them as if belonging to the government. Revolutionists take no thought of the day of reckoning; success by any means is their aim.—From "Uncle Sam on Police Duty," by Arthur Wallace Dunn, in the American Review of Reviews for April.

SPORTS
News and Notes

BASEBALL.

The baseball public may be prepared for some surprising developments during the season of 1911 in the National League, and I understand that the champion Philadelphia Athletics are not altogether sure of their position in the American League. I am not so familiar with affairs in the American League, but, in the National, I am fully aware of the fact that New York, Pittsburg and Chicago will have to fight every inch of the way to maintain the prestige that they have held for the last ten years.

To attempt to predict the winner at this time would be foolhardy, for the element of luck in baseball is too large to permit of any degree of accuracy in forecasts. I feel comparatively safe, however, in saying that in my judgment the teams in the first division will be New York, Chicago, Pittsburg and Cincinnati.—From "Pennant Chances" by John J. McGraw in Metropolitan Magazine.

Veteran base runners study the pitchers very closely, and if they have any mannerism or peculiar motion when about to throw to the plate the runner will detect it and start for second. I once knew a pitcher who had a peculiar habit of twisting his foot and slightly lifting his heel every time he was about to throw to the plate. He did not use that motion when throwing to first. We caught on to this peculiarity and stole bases by the wholesale. That pitcher went all season without understanding why so many bases were stolen on him. If he had only kept that foot down we couldn't have got the jump on him. It took me several months to break young Louis Drucke of one of these mannerisms. Hans Wagner, Joe Tinker and others got onto him and kept the young fellow up in the air until he finally overcame the habit.—John J. McGraw in the April Metropolitan Magazine.

Among the players we do not use the word "signal." With us it is a "sign." There are not as many "signs" used on a ball club as the public would believe. Of course the catcher must "sign" the pitcher for every ball that he throws. That is to prevent confusion, or, as we say, to keep from "crossing each other."

The catcher has a sign for a curve ball, a fast ball, and a slow one. To ball players all curve balls, such as the drop and the outcurve, are called a "curve." The catcher gives the same sign for any one of them. We do not call a ball that jumps "in" a curve. Ball players do not recognize the incurve. That is called a fast ball. Any ball thrown by a right-handed pitcher with sufficient speed will jump inward to a slight degree. The outcurve and drop are unnatural curves, and the ball must be spun in an unnatural manner to get that peculiar "break."

The only other "sign" of importance is the one the batter gives to the runner when he intends to hit the ball. If he wants the runner to start as he swings (the hit and run play) he gives him a certain sign. There are any number of signs used for this play. Sometimes the batter gives it by rubbing his hand over the small end of the bat. Again, he may give it by knocking the dust from his shoes with the big end of the bat.—John J. McGraw in April Metropolitan Magazine.

GOLF.

These are busy times for the professional golfers, who are arriving on almost every steamer. Those having jobs waiting them are anxious to get to work on the greens, while others less fortunate are scurrying around trying to locate for the season. One of the latest arrivals was Jack Herd, a brother of the famous Alec. The first named left for Chicago this week, as he expected to secure a green in that vicinity within a few days. Herd was at Racine, Wis., last year.

Tom Paterson, a clubmaker, has been engaged as "pro" by the Knollwood Country Club. He succeeds Robert Thomson, who recently signed with Glen Ridge. Paterson is a native of Earls Ferry, Scotland, where James Braid, five times open champion of Great Britain, learned the game. Alec Duncan, brother of George Duncan, has arrived, and will take charge at the Philadelphia Cricket Club. It was at first reported that Will Hutchinson was going there, but the last named has been secured by the Huntingdon Valley Country Club. James Laing will be retained as green keeper.

The Robertson brothers, Peter and David, arrived on Saturday, and will go to the Pittsburg Golf Club, where Peter is professional. Fred Brand is also back. Then there is Barrett Melville, formerly private professional to Lord Ivy, and Willie Kidd, who brings with him from the other side a fine amateur record.

Irving Stringer is back from abroad for another season at St. Andrews, while Charles Thom, the Shinnecock "pro" is due to return from Miami on April 6. The veteran Will Kirk has been engaged by the Hovenkoff Country Club, of Suffern. Isaac Machie, the Fox Hill professional, is at his old job again after a successful winter at the Cape Fear Golf Club, of Wilmington, N. C.

Fred Fitzjohn is booked for the Antlers Golf Club, at Amsterdam, N. Y., while Fred Pye is ordering supplies again for the Sparkill Golf Club, in Rockland County. George Low, of Baltusrol, is on the high seas, having sailed on the Baltic.

The season is unusually well advanced at the Montclair Golf Club, and Tom Anderson has the greens in almost normal condition. The club has a new gasolene cutter made especially to climb the Montclair hills.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

At assembly yesterday morning the silver cup awarded annually to the winners of the basketball championship between the borough and the city was presented to the boys' team by Principal Lindsey Best, who congratulated the team on the splendid showing of both the boys' and girls' teams. It is the first win for the boys in two years.

The members of the casts of two plays which are to be given by the Girls' Athletic Association on April 8, are rapidly improving in their parts. The plays are entitled, "Six Cups of Chocolate" and "The Lamentable Tragedy of Julius Caesar." The first is a comedy and the second a musical farce which will be worth going miles to see and hear.

Sewell Ulrich, manager of the P. H. S. baseball team, is making a strong plea for financial support for the players this season. As a good way to begin he said that the purchase of a season ticket would be a good step for the rooters to take. The team has a long schedule for the season which includes seventeen games at home. The first game will be with the Manhattan College reserves on Saturday afternoon. The New Yorkers are strong and a good game is expected.

LEHIGH RAISES PAY FOR 3,000 TRAINMEN.

The demand of between 2,500 and 3,000 trainmen employed by the Lehigh Valley Railroad on its main line and branches between New York and Buffalo for an increase in wages was granted yesterday by General Manager J. The increase will go into effect on April 1. In the freight service the flagmen will be increased from $2.30 to $2.52½ a day and the freight trainmen from $2.30 to $2.42. In the passenger service the trainmen will be advanced from $2.35 to $2.45 and the baggagemen from $2.45 to $2.65. In the yard service the day conductors who now receive $3.30 will get $3.50 and the night conductors who got $3.40, will now receive $3.70. The day yard trainmen will be advanced from $2.90 to $3.20 and the night men from $3 to $3.40.

CONTINUOUS FUN AT MOCK TRIAL

Despite the heavy thunder shower which raged over Watchung last night two hundred people turned out to attend the mock trial given by the Watchung Chemical Engine Company for the benefit of Wilson chapel and the company and enjoyed a hearty laugh throughout the whole performance. Something was "put over" on nearly everyone present and the fun was continuous.

Testimony brought out that the firm of Neier and Hance was a "shyster" concern; that William Demler's judgment in a horse trade was excellent, but in nothing else; that Justice Hughes' charges for remarrying couples were exorbitant—namely one dollar when the operation could be performed in Plainfield for fifty cents; that "Judge" Wheeler was considered an "easy mark;" that Albert Perret, Jr., is a "cheap skate," and that W. De La R. Anderson was secretly admired by every girl in Watchung, especially one "Ada Jones."

"High Sheriff" Mobus and "Sherlock Holmes" Canning performed their offices admirably; George Schmidt administered the wonderful Watchung oath with great effect. There was some trouble at the beginning in filling the jury box as most of the talesmen proved to be hard of hearing. It was eventually filled and the final result of the trial was the verdict rendered by the jury that the defendant was not guilty and that Mr. Anderson be sentenced to another term as president of the society and that A. Perret, Jr., on account of blowing his "best girl" to a treat of pork and beans, was the real culprit and was ordered arrested.

Those taking the principal parts in the production were the following:

C. C. Wheeler, "Justice" Hughes, Francis Dodin, Edward Canning, M. H. Cleavet, William Patti, W. deLa. R. Anderson, George Schmidt, T. H. A. Leurssen, and Mrs. C. C. Wheeler. There was also a jury of twelve men.

Inspired by the success of the "trial" the engine company and the North Plainfield Township Improvement Society contemplate the joint production of an amateur dramatic performance in the near future.

Frech's Auto Destroyed.

An automobile valued at $3,200, belonging to John H. Frech, of Somerville, counsel to the Somerset County Board of Freeholders, was totally destroyed by fire on the Bernardsville road, Tuesday. He was riding along in the machine when he noticed smoke issuing from beneath. He had hardly time to stop and clamber out when it was enveloped in flames. There was no way to put them out and Mr. Frech was compelled to stand by and see the car burn. There was an insurance of $1,000.

WANTS WOMEN'S VOTES AT SCHOOLS' ELECTION

There was a mix-up in connection with the concurrent resolution introduced by Senator Frelinghuysen, of Somerset, which, no doubt raised the hopes of the suffragettes to a high point. The resolution provided for an amendment to the State Constitution to permit women to vote at school elections. It was referred to a committee, but in some manner it was placed with other papers to be sent to the Assembly, and got over there. The Senate, to straighten out the tangle adopted a resolution to recall the resolution, and it is now safely back in the hands of the proper committee.

Aside from this fact it will be two years yet before the State Constitution can be amended in any form, so the suffragettes are doomed to disappointment for a time. There can be nothing done in their behalf within that period. Meanwhile, they may be able to work up some sentiment that will be favorable to the amendment of the Constitution in accord with their wishes.

TOO BOASTFUL.

Over the entrance of a fish market in one of Boston's suburbs is the following conspicuous sign:

"If it swims, we've got it."

It seems to me that this is rather a broad and sweeping label to tack on a fish store, says a writer in the Boston Post. Some day when I happen to be in the neighborhood of this fish store and can make up my mind to keep my face straight, I am going to walk in and say to the fishman:

"Please give me a four-opund roast of sperm wale."

"Oh, we never carry any sperm whale."

Then I will say:

"Ha, ha! Then you haven't got everything that swims, have you? Ha, ha!" (This remark will be very clever of me.)

Then he will say:

"Well, when I put up that sign I didn't thing anybody would be such an idiot as to ask for a sperm whale."

Then I will probably say:

"Ha, ha!" again, slap him right on the flat of his face and walk out.

Or I might ask for a yard and a half of ell, or a lion of sea serpent, or two pounds of gold fish, or a tender young muskrat—I have not quite made up my mind fhat i will ask for, but I'll get that fishman's goat yet.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

The combination of the Scotch dramatist, James Matthew Barrie, and of that exceedingly popular actress, Ethel Barrymore, will be very much in evidence at the Plainfield theatre Saturday night next when Charles Frohman is to present the actress in the Barrie double bill, "Alice Sit-by-the-Fire" and "The Twelve Pound Look." Miss Barrymore will be seen in both plays, but it is her wish and Mr. Frohman's as well that the occasion be taken as an evening with J. M. Barrie. The evening will begin with the longer play, the three act "Alice Sit-by-the-Fire." The place of importance will be given on the program to "The Twelve Pound Look," to meet fully the wish of Miss Barrymore, for whom it was originally written, that "not even the latest of late comers may lose a single word of it."

The Black Patti Musical Comedy Company, which is recognized as one of the most popular and successful stage attractions in the United States, presenting a varied style of entertainment, will be seen at the Plainfield theatre, Tuesday night next on April 4. The company consists of forty Afro-Americans, headed by Mme. Sissieretta Jones, popularly known as the Black Patti, and considered to be the most accomplished singer of her race, and Jolly John Larkins, the unexcelled droll comedian, reputed to be the funniest colored man alive. Black Patti has appeared with great success in Europe, singing in Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg, London and other music centers, and enjoys the distinction of having sung by command for the present King of Great Britain.

SOME FAVORITE LACES.

There are several types of laces that are sure to win favor for midwinter wear. The filets, with their hand-run designs in coarse thread, and the heavy venises are the most effective when a certain heavy contrast is required.

Filet lace is capable of incorporation with the finest kind of valenciennes or net. It can be touched up with colors, too, by a quick backward and forward running stitch, for the most of this lace forms the framework on which flat leaves or conventional forms may be built by clever fingers.

Filet lace is excellent on velvets and filmy materials; it can be combined with linen for summer wear or with heavy cloths for winter. It can be dyed to match any color, emerging from its bath in very good shape, or it can be used in its white and ecru shades, giving the relief at throat and wrists that many women require.

Venise lace is again in the first ranks. Perhaps a certain style has been responsible for the adoption of this weave. You know that in Paris, that centre of fashion's wheel, velvet dresses, perfectly plain in line, are trimmed with wide, heavy lace collars. The makers tried first one kind and then another, and then, as most of them do, they referred to the masters in art and were content with velvet and venise. The effect is convincingly beautiful.

Irish lace continues to be favored. It is expensive, to be sure, but it wears well and has an undeniable richness in appearance. With black velvet it is frequently allied. It must be in rather large patches, such as a whole yoke with deep sleeves or one-half of a draped bodice. This means money, but good lace lasts even unto the third generation. Irish lace can be removed and washed, which is a point in its favor.

Shadow laces are still as lovely as ever. In the finest, cobwebby meshes the solid forms done in fine thread give a soft, unusual effect that is appropriate with chiffons, supple silks or satins.

Wide bands of crocheted lace are invading the field. Oriental laces and strips in which motifs of embroidered linen are incorporated are in great vogue. So, also, is the lace known as Carrickmacross—that lace in which linen or batiste forms are applied to the mesh.

Cluny, always rich, is good and effective in much the same alliances as those in which venise laces are used. In black and white it comes, and on some models both colors are used together.

On hats, gowns, wraps, muffs, scarfs and even shoe laces are used this season. Do not allow any rich lengths to lie unusued in the cedar chest upstairs. It is a season in which fortunate owners can display their treasures. Do not neglect the opportunity.

DON'T FOR HOSTESS.

Don't invite more guests than you can seat comfortably at your table. A peace of two feet should be allowed for each person.

Don't send your plate away, or appear to have done eating till your guests have all finished.

Don't notice if your guests drink water. They may or may not be teetotallers from principle, but in any case they drink what they like, and prefer to do so without attracting attention.

Don't press your guests to take more or partake of any special kind of food. They know they are welcome to all they want, and such pressing is embarrassing.

Don't betray anxiety if the servants are awkward or not quite up to their work, and, above all, don't correct them. Their error will probably escape notice, but the correction would attract the attention of your guests. When any little contretemps occurs don't appear aware of it, but, by chatting on composedly, divert people's attention from it.

Number 3
THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

NEWARK CONFERENCE VISITS PENNINTON

Accepting the invitation of Rev. Frank McNaiel, president of Pennington Seminary, the members of the Newark Conference, today visited the institution at Pennington, the train for the trip being provided by Former Governor J. Franklin Fort, who also entertained the ministers at a sumptuous dinner at Pennington. During the stay, an address was made by former Governor E. C. Stokes and others prominent in the denomination.

The sessions of the conference will resume in Newark this evening, according to the program. Not wishing to expose himself to the weather, Bishop Henry Warren, did not attend the anniversary services at Central M. E. church, last night. Rev. Dr. John A. Gutteridge, president of the Centenary Fund and Preachers' Aid Society, the anniversary of which was held last night, left a sick bed at Ocean Grove to preside at the service. Rev. Dr. C. M. Anderson, of this city, is a trustee of the society.

The standing committees were announced yesterday and among the local members is Rev. W. A. Knox, of Dunellen, who was placed on the committee on home missions and church extension.

Six ministers of the conference died during the year and they were eulogized at yesterday's session. Rev. Dr. C. M. Anderson read the eulogy on the death of Rev. Frederick C. W. Ramoth.

Bishop Warren notified the conference of the receipt of a draft for $2,724, representing the conference's share in the dividends of the American Book Concern. This is the largest check ever received from this source and was ordered to be turned over to the stewards for use in the preacher's pension fund. Rev. Dr. Thomas D. Spencer was reappointed conference agent to the Methodist Review.

It is the opinion of those in close touch with affairs that the appointments for next year will not be made before Monday, and it is also the belief that there will be many changes throughout the conference. Rev. William C. O'Donnell, now of St. Paul's church, Newark, but formerly of Monroe Avenue church, this city, has asked to be relieved owing to ill health and his plans for next year are uncertain at the present time.

'PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

The gutters on Park avenue and Front street are receiving their annual spring cleaning out. The work being done under the supervision of the Township Committee.

Nightly rehearsals are being held by the members of the Italian band and several band concerts are promised for the coming summer.

Mrs. Alexander Muir and children, of Newark, are visiting Mrs. Muir's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Meyer, of Front street.

All roads will lead to Garwood tomorrow night, when the dance of the baseball team will be held in Becker's auditorium.

Miss Matilda Kelihu, of Westfield avenue, is spending several weeks with relatives at Hunter, N. Y.

Twilight Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., holds a regular meeting tonight in the Library rooms.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

The new election laws, which are now before the Legislature and likely to be passed, will materially affect Dunellen in several ways. The most important is in reference to polling places. The new law states that there must be one for every 400 voters. At the last election there were over 500 names on the registry list and only the one polling place has been in commission. This will mean the establishment of another. There are other clauses in the new law which will entirely revise the preliminary work of elections and make campaign work very difficult.

Washington Camp, No. 98, P. O. S. of A., will meet tonight and initiate several candidates. The members are now hard at work preparing for the next class initiation which will be held on April 6. Ten candidates are in readiness and several more will probably be secured before the date. Delegates from camps in Plainfield, Bound Brook and other places will be present.

Tool thieves invaded the borough a few nights ago and broke into the tool house on the grounds where the W. S. Craig residence is being erected. Utensils belonging to the carpenters on the job and valued at $100 were taken. There is no clue to the thieves.

Although reports have been current that the water company would rebuild the New Market dam, there have been no signs of any work on it yet and it is not at all unlikely that the lake will be conspicuous by its absence this summer.

The rural playlet "Among the Berkshires" will be presented in Friendship Hall on April 18, under the auspices of Lakeside Council, Daughters of Liberty.

HARREY GIVES DESCRIPTIVE TALK ON SOUTH AMERICA.

At the regular mid-week meeting of the Crecsent Avenue Presbyterian church last evening, C. D. Harrey, National travelling secretary of the Y. M. C. A. gave an intensely interesting talk on the work of the association in South America.

Mr. Harrey's travels have taken him from the uttermost parts of Chile to the interior of Colombia and the work among the young men of those countries is declared to be the most absorbing of any yet undertaken by him. The members present thoroughly enjoyed the address.

P. O. MEN GET AFTER WISNERS

New York, March 30.—Postoffice inspectors, accompanied by a squad of Central Office men, backed a patrol wagon up to the Brunswick building at 225 Fifth avenue, Monday, and carted off a full load of mining and oil stock certificates and "literature," with books and papers recording the transactions of the Standard Securities Company.

At the same time Postoffic Inspectors Kincaid, Griggs, Booth and Mayhew lined up visitors and employes in the offices of the Standard Securities Company and A. L. Wisner & Co., and picked out Archie L. Wisner, Emmet S. Wisner and Grover C. Trumbull, respectively president, secretary and treasurer of the Wisner concern for whom they had warrants charging them with using the United States mails in a scheme to defraud. The three prisoners were taken before Commissioner Gilchrist, in the federal building, where A. L. Wisner was held in $7,000, E. S. Wisner in $5,000 and Trumbull in $1,500. They couldn't find a bondsman just then, and Marshal Henkel locked them up in the Tombs.

A. L. Wisner & Co. have been in business for a number of years.

Complaints that performance in the way of dividends didn't come up to promises began to reach the postoffice authorities a year or more ago. The investigation has just been finished, and the inspectors report that none of the companies is now operating, and that few own any property, although, they say, Wisner and his associates kept selling stocks in them.

LOVES GROCERY CLERK BETTER THAN HUSBAND

Declaring that she loved him more than she did her husband, Mrs. Frederick Spencer told in the recorder's court at Westfield, the story of how she and C. L. Smith, a grocery clerk, had planned to elope. Spencer made a complaint before the recorder against Smith, charging him with inducing his wife, Evilene, to desert him and her children, and with trying to get his wife to poison him.

When put on the witness stand, Mrs. Spencer, without any show of emotion or embarrassment, told how she and Smith met on St. Patrick's Day, at Smith's boarding-house on Broad street, Westfield, and decided that they could not live without each other. They arranged that on the following Monday she was to pack such of her clothing as she required and was to go to Bound Brook, where he would meet her and together they were to go to Baltimore.

They had made no definite plans as to what they should do after they reached Baltimore. Smith, she said, told her that he had $125, and that would take them where no one would find them. She carried out her part of the program on the day appointed, but Smith failed to appear, and after waiting for him nearly all day at Bound Brook she returned to Westfield. Her husband demanded an explanation. He offered to take her back, and for the sake of her three children she went home. Since then, she added, Smith reappeared on the scene, and by threats endeavored to get her to arrange to go away again. She declared that she still loved Smith more than her husband, but for the sake of her children would have nothing more to do with him.

Smith, after hearing the story, called it "all a pack of lies." When he called her story lies, Mrs. Spencer sprang at Smith as though she intended to strike him, but Court Officer McNeely caught her. Several times the officer had to stand between Smith and Spencer to prevent the latter attacking Smith.

Spencer is employed at the planing mill run by Congressman W. E. Tuttle. He is a steady man and has always borne a good reputation. Smith has been employed in several grocery stores in town.

Smith was held by the court under $200 bonds.

WESTFIELD'S INVESTIGATION.

It was announced Tuesday that there will be no more public hearings of the Westfield Council investigation committee. The committee will meet this week and prepare a report to be presented at the next meeting of the Council. It is understood that as there has been no instance disclosed in which the town paid exorbitant prices for goods sold the town by councilmen, several of the committee are in favor of recommending that the matter be closed, if the violation of the law is not resumed.

It was shown that though Councilman Robert Hohenstein had rented a building to the town for a temporary fire department headquarters, it had been a saving of about $4,800 to the municipality, as it would have been compelled to erect a temporary building had they not taken Mr. Hohenstein's.

The mission study class of the First M. E. church will have charge of the meeting at the Salvation Army tonight. There will be good instrumental and vocal music and the public is invited.

We WANT COMPETITION of the Right Sort, Not the Following Kind!

A Mrs. S—— after selecting her outfit and learning the total cost from our plainly marked price tags, said she preferred to make comparisons elsewhere before ordering, to which we readily agreed, for it's a thing we always URGE!

On getting another store's prices (where they were marked in private signs) she found ours were far less, and SAID so. The salesman promptly dropped to our figures—AND GOT THE ORDER.

Here, where there's but ONE PLAINLY MARKED PRICE ON EVERY ITEM, such an "accommodating" and sudden price drop would be impossible—here, when you read the price tag, you KNOW it's already at lowest point, for ALL prices are made and REMAIN on the SAME UNIFORMLY SMALL PROFIT BASIS. We don't HAVE to run a "leader" here and there for an hour, or a day, to catch trade, as ALL lines are equally good values EVERY day in the year!

All we want is HONEST competition that meet OUR plainly marked prices WITH prices you can READ!

ISN'T THAT FAIR?

EASY CREDIT 6 months, 1 year, or 1½ year's time to pay—or 10 per cent off for cash.

LITERARY.

Emerson Hough, author of "The Mississippi Bubble," "The Purchase Price," and other "best sellers" contributes an especially noteworthy story to The Red Book Magazine for April, entitled, "Fine Gold."

With a Sherlock Holmes "Adventure" and a Jacobs story the April Strand should prove of more than ordinary interest to the magazine reader. Both these contributions are read with keen delight by their numerous admirers.

A budget of interesting stories and articles appears in the April issue of the Wide World Magazine. The Rev. F. Cowley Whitehouse, of Constantinople, describes "The Turk at Play," and assures us that, when he chooses, the indolent Turk can exert considerable strenuousness.

Munsey's Magazine for April discloses an historic find of world-wide interest in a series of hitherto unpublished letters by Mary Baker Eddy, written during one of the most controversial periods of her life, her girlhood. They are embodied in an article entitled "The Girlhood of Mary Baker Eddy."

A host of theatre-going readers will have an irresistible desire to pick up the April National Magazine for the second installment of William Hodge's notable serial, "The Guest of Honor." Mr. Hodge's popularity as an author bids fair to increase the million admirers who saw his incomparable acting in "The Man From Home."

The fact that the April Lippincott's contains a new complete novel by Will Levington Comfort, author of "Routledge Rides Alone," is sufficient to make the magazine of extraordinary interest to the thousands who have enjoyed that "best selling" book, but in addition that interest is amply "backed up" by the general excellence of the rest of its contents.

The April issue of Success Magazine contains a significant article entitled "The Oregon Idea," describing Oregon's experience in putting the government in the hands of the people. In "Missionaries to the Soil," Forrest Crissey describes Uncle Sam's method of preaching the gospel of better crops to the farmers of the South.

The "True Story of the Cleveland Gold Bond Issue" in the April Metropolitan Magazine tells for the first time what took place behind the scenes in that memorable transaction and describes the dramatic interview between Grover Cleveland and J. P. Morgan at the White House. It is an important article and full of human interest.

Baseball, the great American game, occupies an unique position among sports. It has a greater attendance than any other sport can boast anywhere in the world. Last year 7,256,525 people saw the big league games, and countless thousands more saw the minor league games, and many, many thousands saw the unreckoned amateur games. —St. Nicholas.

If revolution rages in Mexico after the death of Diaz it will be incumbent upon this nation not only to protect the lives and property of our own citizens, but to see that a stable government is established and maintained. We went to war with Spain because we could no longer permit the intolerable conditions in Cuba. Nor is it likely that the United States will ever again permit like conditions to exist on the American continent.—Review of Reviews.

The place of honor in Scribner's Magazine for April is given to Sargent's portrait of Robert Louis Stevenson and to the "New Letters" edited by Sir Sidney Colvin. It is nearly twelve years since the two volumes of Stevenson's Letters were published. Since that time his fame has continued to increase and Sir Sidney Colvin, believing that a definitive edition of all his letters, including the Vailima Letters, re-arranged in the order of date, should be published, has included one hundred and fifty hitherto unpublished.

KNOCK FOR LEGAL "ADV." RATES IN LEGISLATURE.

Trenton, March 30.—The Senate passed, with but one dissenting vote Monday night, the Fitzherbert bill, repealing all existing laws establishing rates for legal advertising. Senator Nichols, of Cumberland, voted against the bill. Senate Edge, who owns some newspapers, also refrained from voting because of his personal interest in the matter.

In the House, Monday night, Mr. Donnelly, of Hudson, introduced a bill amending the act of April 3, 1909, regulating the price for official advertising, as follows: In cities and counties of the first-class ten cents per agate line first insertion, eight cents per line for each subsequent insertion; second-class cities and counties, eight cents for each agate line for first insertion and six cents per agate line for such subsequent ones. In all other cities and counties the rates shall be six cents per onoparell line first insertion, five cents for each subsequent one.

The Diva's Ruby

Margaret had the solid health of a great singer, and it would have been a serious trouble indeed that could have interfered with her unbroken and dreamless sleep during at least eight hours; but when she closed her eyes that night she was quite sure that she could not have slept at all but for Potts' comforting little story about the brother with the "countertenor" voice. Yet even so, at the moment before waking in the morning, she dreamt that she was at the telephone again, and that words in a strange language came to her along the wire in a soft and caressing tone that could only be a woman's, and that for the first time in all her life she knew what it was to be jealous. The sensation was not an agreeable one.

"Potts," She Said Suddenly, and Then Stopped.

The dream-voice was silent as soon as she opened her eyes, but she had not been awake long without realizing that she wished very much to see Logotheti at once, and was profoundly thankful that she had torn up her letter to Lady Maud. She was not prepared to admit, even now, that Konstantin was the ideal she should have chosen for a husband, and whom she had been describing from imagination when she had suddenly stopped writing. But, on the other hand, the mere thought that he had perhaps been amusing himself in the society of another woman all yesterday afternoon made her so angry that she took refuge in trying to believe that he had spoken the truth and that she had really been mistaken about the voice.

It was all very well to talk about learning Tartar! How could she be sure that it was not modern Greek, or Turkish? She could not have known the difference. Was it so very unlikely that some charming compatriot of his should have come from Constantinople to spend a few weeks in Paris? She remembered the mysterious house in the Boulevard Pereire where he lived, the beautiful upper hall where the statue of Aphrodite stood, the doors that would not open like other doors, the strangely-disturbing encaustic painting of Cleopatra in the drawing room—many things which she distrusted.

Besides, supposing that the language was really Tartar—were there not Russians who spoke it? She thought there must be, because she had a vague idea that all Russians were more or less Tartars. There was a proverb about it. Moreover, to the English as well as to the French, Russians represent romance and wickedness.

She would not go to the telephone herself, but she sent a message to Logotheti, and he came out in the cool time of the afternoon. She thought he had never looked so handsome and so little exotic since she had known him.

He was received by Mrs. Rushmore and Margaret together, and he took noticeable pains to make himself agreeable to the mistress of the house. At first Margaret was pleased at this; but when she saw that he was doing his best to keep Mrs. Rushmore from leaving the room, as she probably would have done, Margaret did not like it. She was dying to ask him questions about his lessons in Tartar, and especially about his teacher, and she probably meant to cast her inquiries in such a form as would make it preferable to examine him alone rather than before Mrs. Rushmore; but he talked on and on, only pausing an instant for the good lady's expressions of interest or approval.

He was telling her what a prime minister had told an ambassador about the pope, when Margaret rose rather abruptly.

"I'm awfully sorry," she said to Mrs. Rushmore, by way of apology, "but I really must have a little air. I've not been out of the house all day."

Mrs. Rushmore understood, and was not hurt, though she was sorry not to hear more. The "dear child" should go out, by all means. Would Mons. Logotheti stay to dinner? No? She was sorry. She had forgotten that she had a letter to write in time for the afternoon post. So she went off and left the two together.

Margaret led the way out upon the lawn, and they sat down on garden chairs under a big elm tree. She said nothing while she settled herself very deliberately, avoiding her companion's eyes till she was quite ready, and then she suddenly looked at him with a sort of blank stare that would have disconcerted any one less superlatively self-possessed than he was. It was most distinctly Mme. de Cordova, the offended prima donna, that spoke at last, and not Miss Margaret Donne, the "nice English girl."

"What in the world has got into you?" she inquired in a chilly tone.

He opened his almond-shaped eyes a little wider with an excellent affectation of astonishment at her words and manner.

"Have I done anything you don't like?" he asked in a tone of anxiety and concern. "Was I rude to Mrs. Rushmore?"

Margaret looked at him a moment longer, and then turned her head away in silence, as if scorning to answer such a silly question. The look of surprise disappeared from his face, and he became very gloomy and thoughtful but said nothing more. Possibly he had brought about exactly what he wished, and was satisfied to await the inevitable result. It came before long.

"I don't understand you at all," Margaret said less icily, but with the sad little air of a woman who believes herself misunderstood. "It was very odd yesterday, at the telephone, you know—very odd indeed. I suppose you didn't realize it. And now, this afternoon, you have evidently been doing your best to keep Mrs. Rushmore from leaving us together. You would still be telling her stories about people if I hadn't obliged you to come out!"

"Yes," Logotheti asserted with exasperating calm and meekness, "we should still be there."

"You did not want to be alone with me, I suppose. There's no other explanation, and it's not a very flattering one, is it?"

"I never flatter you, dear lady," said Logotheti gravely.

"But you do! How can you deny it? You often tell me that I make you think of the Victory in the Louvre—"

"It's quite true. If the statue had a head it would be a portrait of you."

"Nonsense! And in your moments of enthusiasm you say that I sing better than Mme. Bonanni in her best days—"

"Yes. You know quite as much as she ever did, you are a much better musician, and you began with a better voice. Therefore you sing better. I maintain it."

"You often maintain things you don't believe," Margaret retorted, though her manner momentarily relaxed a little.

"Only in matters of business," answered the Greek with imperturbable calm.

"Pray, is 'learning Tartar' a matter of business?" Her eyes sparkled angrily as she asked the question.

Logotheti smiled; she had reached the point to which he knew she must come before long.

"Oh, yes!" he replied with alacrity. "Of course it is."

"That accounts for everything, since you are admitting that I need not even try to believe it was a man whom I heard speaking."

"To tell the truth, I have some suspicions about that myself," answered Logotheti.

"I have a great many." Margaret laughed rather harshly. "And you behave as if you wanted me to have more. Who is this eastern woman? Come, be frank. She is some one from Constantinople, isn't she? A Fanariote like yourself, I dare say—an old friend who is in Paris for a few days, and would not pass through without seeing you. Say so, for heaven's sake, and don't make such a mystery about it!"

"How very ingenious women are!" observed the Greek. "If I had thought of it I might have told you that story through the telephone yesterday. But I didn't."

Margaret was rapidly becoming exasperated, her eyes flashed, her firm young cheeks reddened handsomely, and her generous lips made scornful curves.

"Are you trying to quarrel with me?"

The words had a fierce ring; he glanced at her quickly and saw how

The best paper that we know of is that manufactured by

For years this has been the universal favorite among discriminating people. There is as much difference between it and the "no-name" kind as there is between linen and cambric cloth. Prove it for yourself by comparison.

well her look agreed with her tone. She was very angry.

"If I were not afraid of boring you," he said with quiet gravity, "I would tell you the whole story, but—" he pretended to hesitate.

He heard her harsh little laugh at once.

"Your worst enemy could not accuse you of being a bore!" she retorted. "Oh, no! It's something quite different from boredom that I feel, I assure you!"

"I wish I thought that you cared for me enough to be jealous," Logotheti said earnestly.

"Jealous!"

No one can describe the tone of indignant contempt in which a thoroughly jealous woman disclaims the least thought of jealousy with a single word; a man must have heard it to remember what it is like, and most men have. Logotheti knew it well, and at the sound he put on an expression of meek innocence which would have done credit to a cat that had just eaten a canary.

"I'm so sorry," he cried in a voice like a child's. "I didn't mean to make you angry, I was only wishing aloud. Please forgive me!"

"If your idea of caring for a woman is to make her jealous—"

This was such an obvious misinterpretation of his words that she stopped short and bit her lip. He sighed audibly, as if he were very sorry that he could do nothing to appease her, but this only made her feel more injured. She made an effort to speak coldly.

"You seem to forget that so long as we are supposed to be engaged I have some little claim to know how you spend your time!"

"I make no secret of what I do. That is why you were angry just now. Nothing could have been easier than for me to say that I was busy with one of the matters you suggested."

"Oh, of course! Nothing could be easier than to tell me an untruth!"

This certainly looked like the feminine retort-triumphant, and Margaret delivered it in a cutting tone.

"That is precisely what you seem to imply that I did," Logotheti objected. "But if what I told you was untrue your argument goes to pieces. There was no Tartar lesson, there was no Tartar teacher, and it was all a fabrication of my own!"

"Just what I think!" returned Margaret. "It was not Tartar you spoke, and there was no teacher!"

"You have me there," answered the Greek mildly, "unless you would like me to produce my young friend and talk to him before you in the presence of witnesses who know his language."

"I wish you would! I would like to see 'him!' I should like to see the color of 'his' eyes and hair!"

"Black as ink," said Logotheti.

"And you'll tell me that 'his' complexion is black, too, no doubt!"

"Not at all; a sort of creamy complexion, I think, though I did not pay much attention to his skin. He is a smallish chap, good-looking, with hands and feet like a woman's. I noticed that. As I told you, a doubt occurred to me at once, and I will not positively swear that it is not a girl after all. He, or she, is really a Tartar from central Asia, and I know enough of the language to say what was necessary."

"Necessary!"

"Yes. He—or she—came on a matter of business. What I said about a teacher was mere nonsense. Now you know the whole thing."

"Excepting what the business was," Margaret said incredulously.

"The business was an uncut stone," answered Logotheti with indifference. He had one to sell, and I bought it. "He was recommended to me by a man in Constantinople. He came to Marseilles on a French steamer with two Greek merchants who were coming to Paris, and they brought him to my door. That is the whole story. And here is the ruby. I bought it for you, because you like those things. Will you take it?"

He held out what looked like a little ball of white tissue paper, but Margaret turned her face from him.

"You treat me like a child!" she said.

To her own great surprise and indignation, her voice was unsteady and she felt something burning in her eyes. She was almost frightened at the thought that she might be going to cry, out of sheer mortification.

Logotheti said nothing for a moment. He began to unroll the paper from the precious stone, but changed his mind, wrapped it up again, and put it back into his watch-pocket before he spoke.

"I did not mean it as you think," he said softly.

She turned her eyes without moving her head, till she could just see that he was leaning forward, resting his wrists on his knees, bending his head and apparently looking down at his loosely hanging hands. His attitude expressed dejection and disappointment. She was glad of it. He had no right to think that he could make her as angry as she still was, angry even to tears, and then bribe her to smile again when he was tired of teasing her. Her eyes turned away again, and she did not answer him.

"I make mistakes sometimes," he said, speaking still lower, "I know I do. When I am with you I cannot be always thinking of what I say. It's too much to ask, when a man is as far gone as I am!"

"I should like to believe that," Margaret said, without looking at him.

"Is it hard to believe?" he asked so gently that she only just heard the words.

"You don't make it easy, you know," said she with a little defiance, for she felt that she was going to yield before long.

"I don't know how to. You're not in the least capricious—and yet—"

"You're mistaken," Margaret answered, turning to him suddenly. "I'm the most capricious woman in the world! Yesterday I wrote a long letter to a friend, and then I suddenly tore it up—there were ever so many pages! I daresay that if I had written just the same letter this morning I should have sent it. If that is not caprice, what is it?"

"It may have been wisdom to tear it up," Logotheti suggested.

"I'm not sure. I never ask myself questions about what I do. I hate people who are always measuring their wretched little souls and then tinkering their consciences to make them fit! I don't believe I wish to do anything really wrong, and so I do exactly what I like, always!"

"If you will only go on doing what you like," Logotheti answered, "it will give me the greatest pleasure in the world to help you. I only ask one kindness."

"You have no right to ask me anything to-day. You've been quite the most disagreeable person this afternoon that I ever met in my life."

"I know I have," Logotheti answered with admirable contrition. "I'll wait a day or two before I ask anything; perhaps you will have forgiven me by that time."

"I'm not sure. What was the thing you were going to ask?"

He was silent now that she wished to know his thought.

"Have you forgotten it already?" she inquired with a little laugh that was encouraging rather than contemptuous, for her curiosity was roused.

They looked at each other at last, and all at once she felt the deeply disturbing sense of his near presence which she had missed for three days, though she was secretly a little afraid and ashamed of it; and to-day it had not come while her anger had lasted. But now it was stronger than ever before, perhaps because it came so unexpectedly, and it drew her to him.

Their eyes met and they looked long at one another in the shade of the elm tree on the lawn, as the sun was going down. Only a few minutes had passed since Margaret had been very angry, and had almost believed that she was going to quarrel finally, and break her engagement, and be free; and now she could not even turn her face away, and when her hand felt his upon it, she let him draw it slowly to him; and half unconsciously she followed her hand, bending towards him sideways, from her seat, nearer and nearer, and very near.

And as she put up her lips to his, he would that she might drink his soul from him at one deep draught—even as one of his people's poets wished, in the world's spring time, long ago.

It had been a strange love-making. They had been engaged during more than two months, they were young, vital, passionate; yet they had never kissed before that evening hour under the elm tree at Versailles. Perhaps it was for this that Konstantin had played, or at least, for the certainty it meant to him, if he had doubted that she was sincere.

CHAPTER IV.

Without offending Mr. Van Torp, Lady Maud managed not to see him again for some time, and when he understood, as he soon did, that this was her wish, he made no attempt to force himself upon her. She was probably thinking over what he had said, and in the end she would exert her influence as he had begged her to do. He was thoroughly persuaded that there was nothing unfair in his proposal and that, when she was convinced that he was right, she would help him.

But when he had taken the first step towards accomplishing his purpose, he was very much at a loss as to the next, and he saw that he had never undertaken anything so difficult since he had reorganized the Nickel Trust, trebled the stock, cleared a profit of thirty millions and ruined nobody but the small-fry, who, of course, deserved it on the principle that people who cannot keep money ought not to have any. Some unkind newspaper man had then nicknamed it the Brass Trust, and had called him Brassy Van Torp; but it is of no use to throw mud at the Golden Calf, for the dirt soon dries to dust and falls off, leaving the animal as beautifully shiny as ever.

Mr. Van Torp did not quite see how he could immediately apply the force of money to further his plans with effect. He knew his adversary's financial position in Europe much too well to think of trying to attack him on that ground; and besides, in his rough code it would not be fair play to do that. It was "all right" to ruin a hostile millionaire in order to get his money. That was "business." But to ruin him for the sake of a woman was "low down." It would be much more "all right" to shoot him, after fair and due warning, and to carry off the lady. That was impossible in a civilized country, of course; but as it occurred to him, while he was thinking, that he might find it convenient to go somewhere in a hurry by sea, he bought a perfectly new yacht that was for sale because the owner had died of heart disease the week after she was quite ready to take him to the Mediterranean. The vessel was a least as big as one of the ocean liners of 50 years ago, and had done 22 1-16 knots on her trial. Mr. Van Torp took her over as she was, with her officers, crew, cook and stores, and rechristened her. She had been launched as the Alwayn; he called her the Lancashire Lass—a bit of sentiment on his part, for that was the name of a mare belonging to Lady Maud's father, which he had once ridden bareback when he was in an amazing hurry.

MARTINE TAKES OATH AS SENATOR TUESDAY

James E. Martine, who on March 4 succeeded John Kean as one of the United States Senators from New Jersey will perform next Tuesday the final act of becoming a full fledged member of the upper chamber of Congress, when he takes the oath of office at the opening of the extraordinary session called by President Taft.

Senator Martine's credenitals, signed by Governor Woodrow Wilson, were presented to the Senate Friday, February 24, at which time he also signed the roll, thereby becoming entitled to sit in the body after March 4. Members of the Senate lo not take the oath of office until the opening day of the first session after the date of the beginning of their term. Were it not for the fact of an extraordinary session of Congress being called by the President, Senator Martine would not have taken the oath until the opening of the regular session the first Tuesday in Deember.

A party of Jerseymen, including a number of prominent Democrats from Trenton, Jersey City, Plainfield and Elizabeth, will make a special trip to Washington next Tuesday to witness the assumption of the Senatorial office by Mr. Martine.

Senator Martine, accompanied by Mrs. Martine, will go to Washington next Saturday. Temporarily, they will stop at a hotel and later on will engage housekeeping rooms in an apartment house. Mr. Martine has been assigned Suite 408 in the Senate Office Building, the rooms formerly occupied by Senator Oliver, of Pennsylvania. The offices are directly across the corridor on the fourth floor from those occupied by Senator Briggs of New Jersey. Senator Martine's offices were opened yesterday by W. W. St. John, his secretary, who, assisted by E. Jos. Aronoff, of Trenton, as stenographer, is spending this week in organizing the office for active work beginning with the opening of Congress. The Senator has already received a large number of requests for favors from constituents all over the State of New Jersey, and so far as possible this business will be cleaned up before the beginning of legislative work.

Senator Martine has selected seat No. 43 in the Senate. It is the end seat on the second row on the Democratic side. Senator Kern of Indiana will occupy the seat next to Senator Martine, and as both of them are warm personal friends of Colonel William J. Bryan, and have much in common with each other in the matter of Democratic politics, their close association will undoubtedly prove mutually agreeable and advantageous.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

The Girls' Mission Club of the Congregational church will hold its annual supper tomorrow night from 6 to 8 o'clock.

Rev. Thomas Francis, of Jersey City, will continue his Bible studies in the Book of John, at the meeting of the Christian and Missionary Alliance in the church at Duer street and Craig place at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

A woman's missionary meeting will be held in the First Baptist church tomorrow afternoon at 3:00 o'clock. At that time the annual reports will be read. Miss Jenkins, a field worker in Pennsylvania, will make an address.

Superintendent George E. Hall, of the Park Avenue Baptist Sunday-school has asked the members of the school to meet in the primary department room this evening to practice the Easter carols. Many of the teachers will be present and a profitable evening is promised to all who attend.

SPLIT ON INCOME TAX.

New Jersey Assembly Passes Resolution the Senate Defeated.

The Assembly at Trenton passed unanimously yesterday the income tax resolution similar to the one defeated in the Senate last week.

Tarriff Robbery Costs American People $36,000,000 a Year on Wool.

MISS JANET RICHARDS' TALK.

Proposed Treaty With England Will Be a Blessing to This Country She Says—Dwells on Mexico's Troubles.

Miss Janet Richards, of Washington, D. C., gave her eighth talk on "Current History" in the Hartridge Auditorium yesterday afternoon. She began the talk by a brief outline of the tariff reform question and showed how the present duty on woolen products placed a tax of $36,000,000 a year on the working people of this country in the increased cost of the woolen wearing apparel. The President even characterizes the present woolen schedule as "quite indefensible," and he is using every effort to have Congress appoint a tariff revision board.

Miss Richards then passed to the Peace Treaty at present under consideration between England and America, which has every likelihood of ratification. The Treaty provides that America and England agree to maintain peace between their two people and that all difficulties arising at any time between them "must" be referred to the Hague Conference for settlement by arbitration. The substitution of "must" for "may" was the amendment proposed by Joseph Choate to the Hague Peace convention of 1907 and which there failed to be ratified, but should the present Peace Treaty be ratified as is confidently expected the credit for such a splendid and humanitarian move will belong to America, and all civilized countries it is hoped will soon follow suit. This will mean an immense reduction in taxation for the maintenance of standing armies and though we in America are not overburdened with taxation for armament in certain European countries it is a burden almost too heavy to bear.

Miss Richards then gave a short sketch of the conditions leading up to the Mexican revolution, at present taking place. She said that the three major causes were the system of slavery by which an employer has power not only to force a man to work for him, but also to sell him to any part of the country, a system to which the Mexican government is a party. The matter of eviction so that the hands of the evicted might be made over by the government to the big syndicates and the need of reforming the franchise so that the voice of the people may in reality rule the land are some of the most vital causes of rebellion and the reformation and reconstruction of these defects will alone insure the disbandment of Madero's forces. Miss Richards supported the charges brought against the Mexican government in recent magazine articles and said that at present Mexico instead of a Republic is an oligarchy founded on a plutocracy. She cited the pitiable case of the Yakui Indians, peaceable agriculturalists, who were dipossessed of their lands in order that the latter might fall into the hands of certain wealthy syndicates and when the Yakuis resisted such eviction they were sold into slavery in the Yucatan mines. None the less Miss Richards gave it as the opinion of no less an authority than Gen. John W. Foster that nothing justifies the sending of U. S. troops into Mexico whether such evils exist or not.

Turning to home affairs Miss Richards said the labor world was greatly interested in the Taylor system of efficiency, whereby an economy of motion is effected producing less fatigue on the workers and by a juster distribution of the labor to be performed a more efficient working body and better results are obtained. The introduction of this system and the edict that no employe can be in politics has stirred up great excitement in the government arsenal at Rock Island, Illinois, and the experiment there may be fruitful in causing the trade unions to see what can be done towards standardizing work, the lack of which is the cause of great discouragement to all good and capable workmen.

At the close of her lecture Miss Richards was warmly applauded. Her next talk is to be on Tuesday, April 11.

DE MEZA AND BLIMM NEW HABERDASHERY

Harry G. DeMeza and Harry N. Blimm, under the firm name of DeMeza & Blimm, will open their new men's furnishing store at 143 East Front street, tomorrow. The past experiences of these two young men have enabled them to select a surpassing stock, their idea being to give absolute satisfaction for both appearance and wear. The store is replete from front to back with the classy effects in men's wear.

The firm has secured the exclusive handling in Plainfield of the nobby Crofut and Knapp line of hats. They stand in a class by themselves and the owner of one has comfort and satisfaction. DeMeza and Blimm will also make a specialty of medium priced neckwear. They have a display now which must be seen to be appreciated.

DOUGLAS PRESIDENT OF ASS'N FOOTBALL CLUB

Douglas; vice president, Robert Baillie; secretary, Peter Neil; treasurer, John Craig; financial secretary, George Pearson; trustees, James Brown, John Donaldson; auditor, Albert Stevenson; house committee chairman, Bernard Eglinton; vice chairman, Hugh Hosie; selection committee, Robert Baillie, Fred Cross, Richard Hennessy, James Sinclair, Andrew Cowley; captain, William Spalding; vice captain, Peter Menzies; manager, Oswald Woolgar; property-man and chairman grounds committee, John McNeice; board of governors, James Brown, Albert Stevenson, John Donaldson, Andrew Cowley and Fred Cross.

BRAHAM'S DAUGHTER IN PROCTOR SKETCH

Playgoers of two and three decades ago who have pleasant memories of the famous Harrigan and Hart comedies will revive recollections through the appearance of Miss Alice Braham at Proctor's theatre the rest of the week. This talented young woman is the daughter of Dave Braham, who played no small part in the productions of "The Mulligan Guard's Ball," "Cordelia's Aspirations," "McSorley Flirtations," "Old Lavender" and "The Leather Patch." It was he who wrote the music for all the plays and his songs were whistled and sung for years. To this day, the mention of Harrigan and Hart generally results in the humming of one of Dave Braham's airs.

Miss Braham is presenting a comedy sketch of New York life, entitled, "As Ye Sow, So Shall Ye Reap," in which she has the support of two men. She has inherited much of her father's ability and the act is the hit of the bill. It will interest the Harrigan and Hart devotees as well as the present-day patrons of vaudeville.

The balance of the bill, which is an excellent one, comprises Eli Dawson and the Gillette Sisters in a song, dance and talking skit; the Lyric Four, in operatic and popular selections, and Rice Brothers, in comedy acrobatic antics on the bars.

Gave a Farewell Reception.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Temple Baptist church gave an informal reception to Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Musson, at the home of Mrs. Edward Baker, Jr., on Grove street, yesterday afternoon. There was a large attendance of members and friends. Following a social time, refreshments were served. The society presented Mrs. Musson with a set of silver buttons. Mr. and Mrs. Musson left Plainfield at 1 o'clock this afternoon for Meriden, Conn., and Mr. Musson will preach on Sunday in his new charge, the First Baptist church, for the first time as pastor.

Bought Out Awning Company.

Shirley & Johnston, of West Front street, have purchased the local business of the Jackson Awning & Decorating Company, also of West Front street, and will take over all the business here of the latter concern. Shirley & Johnston have been engaged in the awning business for years and it extends over a wide territory in New Jersey.

HUBS AT THE SHOW

The Office Boy Offers His Serious Criticism of McFadden's Flats.

SAYS "GEE, I HAD TO LAUGH."

Acton Davies and Allan Dale Will Have to Look Out For Their Laurels or "Hubs" May Steal Them.

(By "Hubs" Reynolds.)

"Hub" Reynolds, the office boy of The Daily Press, makes his bow as a dramatic critic. Provided with a "pair of sculls" "Hubs" made sure of his seat by arriving at the playhouse an hour before the curtain was scheduled to rise. This morning, the office boy handed in the "copy" for his assignment, which is herewith printed without the sacrilege of the blue pencil:

Say, "McFadden's Flats" is sure some show. I spread myself last night, and got a juicy seat in the bald-headed row right next to the orchestra. Them two yellow kids, George and Alex, is the best I ever seen. Gee, I had to laugh."

I got a pass last winter for Maude Adams' show, something about a woman is no place for a secret, or something like that and it was punk. I can't understand why the people go bug-house over them plays and pay two bucks for a look where a feller can see "McFadden's Flats" right among the high-brows for seventy-five cents. It's the best they've had here this year. Gee, I had to laugh.

George and Alex were goin' some all the time. What them two kids don't think about aint worth knowin'. They had the cop in the alley wishin' he was in Scotch Plains or some other seaport town all the time. The cops around here woundn't take so much kiddin'. When they played football with his hat, I nearly fell out of my seat, Gee, I had to laugh.

There was a guy there named McFadden who was all to the mustard when it came to playin' the Harp. I seen him in "Happy Hooligan" which was the best show at the Plainfield theatre before this one. I wish it would come back again. There was a Dutchman, last night, who was a scream. Him and McFadden were all the time fightin' about a n'election and the way they rassled around would make a wooden image giggle. Gee, I had to laugh.

Believe me, the woman who played Mrs. Murphy, the widow, was some actor, she could sing and dance grate. Maude Adams didn't sing in the play I saw her in but I'll bet a palace car against a barber's pole she couldn't come up to the widow. When she sang that Mexican song and then the Irish come all ye, or something like that the guys up in the lid nearly went crazy. Gee, I had to laugh.

There was some pretty nifty girls in the show, too. It was fine when they came out in clothes with spangles on like party dresses. I saw one of them on the street with her daughter before the show and you wouldn't think she could act like she did. It was fine when she was in the college scene and said kinda dramatic like, "Here come McFadden girls, lets give our yell." McFadden thought it was a boiler factory explosion and did a flip-flap through the bay window. Gee, I had to laugh.

I've heard lots about the riots over in New York when them harem skirts appeared on the street but it beats me why there was any holler. Some of the damsels in the "flats" had the harem garment beat to a frazzle but I never heard a wheeze from anyone, and Plainfield aint so far from New York, either.

There was lots of other good things in the show, like the dude and the baby elephant and the pistol which was shot off every three minutes. It must cost an awful lot for cartridges when they give the show every night and twice Saturdays. Take it from me if you want to see a show wot is a show you want to see "McFadden's Flats." Honest, kid, if I went to a funeral and thought about it, I'd have to laugh.

Will Hold Annual Meeting.

Officers will be elected and reports will be received at the annual meeting of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, Sunday afternoon and evening. The afternoon meeting will be held at 3:45 o'clock. There will be an intermission from 5 to 6 o'clock for social fellowship, during which time Arthur L. Titsworth will render several organ selections. Supper will be served at 6 o'clock, and at 7:30 o'clock new business will be resumed together with devotional services, music and messages from absent members.

FINED $3 FOR RIDING BIKE ON A SIDEWALK

George Ivins, of Columbia avenue, was fined $3 this morning in the city court by Judge De Meza, for riding his motorcycle on the sidewalk on South Second street. The arrest was made by Patrolman Saunders.

In imposing the fine Judge DeMeza said that the practice of riding on the sidewalks must be stopped and he proposed to make an example of Mr. Ivins. "When you reach a muddy spot get off and walk by it," said the judge, "other people do it and there is no reason why you shouldn't." Ivins said he knew the law, but pleaded that mud caused him to go from the road to the sidewalk.

ENTERTAINMENT AT WASHINGTON SCHOOL

The entertainment given at the Washington School, yesterday afternoon and evening by the teachers and children, was a success and was well attended. The affair was given principally for the purpose of raising funds with which to purchase suitable pictures for the school, and in connection with the entertainment there was a fine exhibition of pictures, loaned by a Boston concern for the purpose.

The pictures, all of which were really works of art and copies of some of the most famous subjects, attracted the attention and admiration of everybody. The school picture fund was materially increased by the entertainment.

Miss Millicent Humpstone, principal of the school, was in charge of the affair, and the program was as follows:

Piano solo, Miss Mary Radford; singing, Spring Song, chorus from the school; instrumental duet, Miss Boyd and Miss Gilfillan; song, chorus of teachers; recitation, selected, Miss Breads; Frog Song, Elmer Blimm, Harry Coffey and Henry Hammann; physical culture drill, fifth and sixth grades; singing, Barbara Frietchie, school chorus; vocal solo, Charles Lewis; Swedish Folk Dances, children from Whittier School.

COUNIHAN TO STAR WILLS NEXT SEASON.

Write the name of Nat Wills in the theatrical firmament. That he is a full candle-power star is the conclusion of Harry Sommers, business manager of the Knickerbocker theatre, and W. J. Counihan, manager of almost any theatrical enterprise that seems to be in need of discipline.

Those intrepid impresarios are now at work upon the plans and specifications of a private orbit which Mr. Wills will occupy next season. He will travel in a musical piece by an author and composer yet to be selected. La Belle Titcomb, who in private life and the pale green family motor car is none other than Mrs. Wills, may or not be his leading woman, and in the event that she is, may or not be accompanied by her famous white charger and her equally famous white tights. —New York Telegraph.

TALKS ON ELECTRICITY TO HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS.

Electricity and its application to modern needs were demonstrated to the pupils of the High School this morning by C. A. Ames, of the Public Service Company: Roger Williams, of Cambridge, Mass., and Charles Fisher, of the Westinghouse Mfg. Co., of Pittsburg.

What seemed to be difficult in the way of electric appliances for home use a few years ago, were demonstrated to be feasible under modern systems. Practical demonstrations of cause and effect were made by the lecturers and the whole student body was intensely interested in the display.

Found Room Decorated.

When Anna Hart, the "widow" in "McFadden's Flats," entered her dressing room at the Plainfield theatre, last evening, she was surprised and delighted to find that Mr. Sanderson had decorated the room with cut flowers and smilax. It was a reminder to Mrs. Hart of the days gone by and a compliment on her perennial youth.

Curtain Will Rise at 8 o'Clock.

Charles Frohman, who will present Ethel Barrymore at the Plainfield theatre tomorrow night in a double bill, "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire" and "The Twelve Pound Look," announces that the curtain will rise promptly at 8 o'clock. Patrons of the play are requested to be in their seats before that time.

Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Ladd, Jr., of Stelle avenue, have been stopping at the Hotel Wolcott, New York.

S.P.C.A. MOVEMENT

Educational Campaign Planned for Public School Children.

ACTIVITY IN UNION COUNTY.

Major Irwin, Mrs. Van Hoesen and Miss Barber Interesting the Authorities in the Scheme.

The movement for an educational campaign among the school children of the State is being pushed with vigor by the Society for The Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The move has been under consideration for several months and now that it has received the approval of all the branches in this State there will be a united action among the various cities and towns where branches exist to the end that all the school children may become acquainted with the aims of the society.

It has been proposed that a convention be held in Elizabeth on May 1. At a meeting of the Elizabeth society on Wednesday evening Major Charles W. Irwin, the probation officer, and Miss Mary Barber, the Elizabeth agent of the society, gave their views on the education of children in relation to the treatment of dumb animals.

Some weeks ago the Plainfield society, through its agent, Mrs. S. G. VanHoesen, approached Superintendent of Schools Henry M. Maxson, on the subject of education along humanitarian lines, suggesting a series of essays and speeches on the subject for which prizes would be awarded through the process of elimination. This matter is now under consideration and will probably be brought before the Board of Education in the near future and some method devised by which the subject may be taken up without interfering with the curriculum of the schools.

The purpose of the May convention will be to form a State organization among all the humane societies to make the work more systematic and more effective. Two delegates from each society are expected to represent their cities in the May convention.

LEON RICE WILL GIVE "AN EVENING OF SONG."

Leon Rice, a well-known New York tenor, will give an "Evening of Song" at the Y. M. C. A. next Tuesday evening, under the auspices of the association. Mr. Rice began singing when eight years of age as a choir boy in Canada and later he studied voice culture with eminent instructors.

The recital he gave at the St. Louis World's Fair was so successful that Mr. Rice gave up his business and devoted his time to music. His plan is to charge no admission, but to take a free-will offering, asking his patrons to contribute according to their appreciation. The songs will all be in English.

Funeral of Mrs. Louisa Cass.

The funeral service of Mrs. Louisa Hegel Cass was held at 10:30 o'clock this morning at the home of her sister, Mrs. William White, on Grove street, and was largely attended by relatives, friends and neighbors. Rev. J. W. Musson, formerly pastor of the Temple Baptist church, conducted the service, reading appropriate Scripture selections, making a few remarks and offering prayer. There were many beautiful floral tributes. The burial was in a family plot at at Mt. Bethel.

Funeral of Mrs. MacNair.

The funeral of Mrs. Thomas MacNair was held yesterday afternoon at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Albert Giddes, of Codington avenue. The service was in charge of Rev. J. O. McKelvey and was attended by relatives and friends. Burial was made in the North Plainfield cemetery, the following acting as pallbearers: John Herrmann, B. A. Waldron, Peter Bowers and George Hummer.

Chief Doane's Aunt Dead.

Word has been received here of the death of Mrs. A. T. Smith, of 715 15th street, Sacramento, Cal. She was an aunt to Chief T. O. Doane, of this city, being a sister to Chief Doane's mother. Mrs. Smith was the last member of the Bagot family, which is now extinct.

To Enforce Ordinance.

Mayor George W. V. Moy has instructed Chief of Police Kiely to rigidly enforce the ordinance which prohibits the leaving of untied horses in the streets of the city. Several runaways have occurred recently and the cause is ascribed to leaving the animals unhitched.

HE GAVE BAD CHECKS; HELD FOR GRAND JURY

Alpheus Miller, the young colored butler, who was arrested yesterday morning on a charge of issuing fraudulent checks, is held under $300 bail to await the action of the grand jury. Judge DeMeza determined on this course yesterday afternoon, after J. Henry Crane entered a plea of not guilty for his client.

So far as can be learned the defense is that Miller had a savings account in one of the local savings institutions and while the amount was small he thought he could draw checks against the deposit. He drew checks for more money than was actually on deposit.

Complaints have been entered against Miller for two checks, one given to the Endress Company for $12 and another for $5, cashed by Schreiner Bros., druggists.

TESTIMONY TAKEN IN CODDINGTON CHARGE

A meeting was held in Junior Hall at Mount Bethel, yesterday afternoon, for the purpose of hearing the charges of Horace Coddington that the Warren township school meeting on March 21 was conducted illegally. Guy D. Peck, who was chairman at the meeting, was in charge, and J. V. Brockway, who was secretary, again presided. Thirty or more of the voters and County Superintendent H. C. Krebs were in attendance.

Only one of Mr. Coddington's charges was heard, that of closing the polls before the legal time limit of one hour. This was conceded by Mr. Peck and the tellers but the testimony of Mr. Coddington and several others was taken. The explanation was made that only one ticket was presented and the secretary cast the ballot. Mr. Coddington came to the polls about a half hour later.

The statement of the officials and the testimony were sent to State Superintendent of Schools Charles J. Baxter and his answer will determine whether or not the meeting is to be declared illegal.

CONFERENCE'S PLEDGE GIVEN TO PENNINGTON

During the visit of the members of the Newark Conference to Pennington Seminary, yesterday, announcement was made that subscriptions aggregating $20,000 towards paying off the debt on the institution had been received. The members of the conference pledged themselves to raise $5,000 and three other subscriptions of $5,000 each were announced. The appeal for funds for the school came from Bishop John W. Hamilton, of Boston, and the Rev. Frank McDaniel, president of the seminary. The school is heavily in debt, hence the request for assistance.

The members of the conference adjourned the session in the Central M. E. church, Newark, at 11:30 o'clock so that they might spend the day at Pennington. After the 300 visitors had enjoyed a substantial luncheon, Bishop Warren, Rev. and Mrs. Frank McDaniel, the trustees and other officers of the school held a reception. Rev. Dr. Thomas O'Hanlon, former president of the seminary, was unable to attend owing to illness.

There are eighty-nine secondary institutions conducted by the Methodist Episcopal church and Pennington ranks eighth in age. The ministers reached Newark about 6 o'clock, in time for the evening session of the conference.

Charles Arthur Kiederling.

Charles Arthur Kiederling, aged two and a half years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Kiederling, died at 9 o'clock this morning, after a four days' illness with pneumonia. The funeral will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kiederling, 258 East Front street, tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock and will be private.

John Keron.

Former Chief John Keron, one of Elizabeth's best known and best-liked citizens, died last night of asthma, aged seventy-six years. He had been chief of police for fifteen years and for many years had been a county detective, occupying that position with much credit at the time of his death. For forty-five years he figured in one capacity or another in the courts and was held in high esteem. For a long time he was engaged in the livery business. A son and two daughters survive him.

BRODHEAD'S IDEAS

Assemblyman Admits His Register Bill Will Meet Defeat.

DEMOCRATS OPPOSED TO IT.

Forced to Introduce Measure Abolishing Office But Is Not "Gunning" For F. H. Smith.

Claiming that House bill 529, which provides for the abolition of the office of registrar of deeds in Union and Camden counties, was introduced by him in the State Assembly because is was practically forced by the trend of legislation along similar lines, and that there was absolutely no political move behind the introduction of the measure, Assemblyman Calvin E. Brodhead, of this city, discussed the bill.

Mr. Brodhead candidly admitted that the primary and sole object of the bill was economy. He gave it as his opinion that the duties now incumbent upon County Registrar F. H. Smith could be easily assumed by the County Clerk and discharged by the latter in conjunction with the duties of the clerk's office.

"That bill was introduced by me of my own volition," declared Mr. Brodhead. "No one came to me to influence me in its introduction. I would not be behind it if it simply affected Union county. I realize that there might be a tendency on the part of a whole lot of people to construe the bill as a blow at the Republican County Chairman. That is not so."

Although he had just returned from a busy day at Trenton and had evidently prepared to forget about the lawmill and the lawmakers, the Assemblyman was just enough interested in Bill 529 to talk upon it. His bill was not the first of its character to be introduced at the present session of the Legislature, he said. Its drafting and introduction was simply following out lines of reform which was laid down by members of both the House and the Senate, he said, and was simply giving the people what they wanted—reform.

"I don't expect to see that bill pass," Mr. Brodhead candidly admitted. "We are going to work for it, however, and that's all we can do. I guess it will meet with opposition from Camden, too, and if Senator Ackerman and Bradley put a ban on it it will be killed. No question about that."

"Do you think," Mr. Brodhead was asked, "that an office as important to the citizens and taxpayers of Union county as the registrar's should be run without a separate head"

"I believe that there should be someone to supervise the work done in the office, but I don't believe that the county should pay a man $6,500 a year for doing work that the County Clerk could do just as well in conjunction with the duties of his office."

"Don't you consider that the office is just as important to the county as that of the Sheriff, County Clerk and Surrogate?"

"Yes, I do, but if other counties in the State, such as Passaic and Bergen can get along without that office, why can't Union county?

"Union county, according to the last census, has a population of about 140,000. Essex county found it necessary to have a registrar of deeds when it only had a population of 98,875. Don't you consider that the establishment of the office in this county in 1904, when the population was 99,000, was just as essential as the establishment of the office in Essex more than half a century ago?"

"That argument may be all well and good in its way. But here is Passaic county, with an even larger population than Union and Bergen, practically in the same class as our county, seeking to abolish this office."

Mr. Brodhead did not say whether or not he knew that the attempt to abolish the office in Passaic county made by the introduction of a bill by Senator Prince was considered a direct political move and not based on any grounds of economy.

"I tell you frankly that the introduction of my bill was forced," Mr. Brodhead continued, "because of similar legislation sought by counties in the same class as Union. There is the Hinner bill affecting Bergen, the Prince bill affecting Passaic, and the Leavitt bill, more sweeping in its provisions than any other, affecting all counties of the second class in the State. But, pshaw! There should be no cause for uneasiness. I am satisfied that my bill will never get through the Senate. Ackerman and Bradley will nail it. Frank Smith can rest easy on that score."

Mr. Brodhead admitted that prominent Democrats in Union county were not in sympathy with the

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

The second public hearing in the New York Telephone franchise application will take place in the borough hall next Monday night. The outcome is awaited with much interest as it is considered extremely improbable that the conditions imposed will be accepted by the corporation. All citizens are urged to attend the hearing and express their views.

Street Commissioner Smalley's men are making good progress in the macadamizing work with stone taken from the trolley roadbed. Several streets have already received attention and the work will continue as long as the stone holds out.

The launching of the Jersey Central's new ferryboat, "Westfield," is scheduled to take place tomorrow at Wilmington, Del. As soon as the craft is put in service it will be piloted by Captain B. A. Cole, of the borough.

Plans for the St. John's church fair to be held the middle of next month are now progressing rapidly. The various committees have the arrangements well in hand and indications point to a very successful affair.

Mrs. Ace, of Stroudsburg, Pa., is visiting her daughters, Mrs. Apgar and Miss Ace, of the borough.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Kirchhoff are now located in one of the Kuldoshes' apartments on North avenue.

'PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

Several of the members of the Methodist church have been attending the annual conference meeting, which has been held this week at Newark. The local Methodists hope that Rev. George Hollingshead, who has been their pastor during the past year, will be returned to the church for another year. Mr. Hollingshead has had a most successful pastorate and is very popular with his people.

George Harper, who has been spending several days with Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Hand, of Park avenue, has returned to his home at Southold, L. I. Mr. Harper's health is much improved and he expects to remove back to town within a short time.

An oyster supper will be held by the ladies of the Baptist church in the church parlors Monday night, April 3. Supper hours will be from 6 to 7:30.

It is needless to say that the town will be well represented at the baseball team's dance, which will be held tonight in Becker's auditorium, Garwood.

Michael Gillotti, of Forest avenue, has returned from a visit of several days with relatives and friends at Bridgeport, Conn.

John Corrona has taken a position with Weller, the painter, and expects to soon be a full-fledged man with the brush.

EASY TRAVELING FOR EXEMPT FIREMEN'S BILL.

Among the early bills passed in the House yesterday was House 491, by Mr. Matthews, who introduced it at the request of the Firemen's Exempt Association of the State. Under the bill exempt firemen who hold office, or who may hereafter be appointed to any, will have the same tenure of office as war veterans.

The measure applies to any exempt fireman of any volunteer fire department, volunteer fire engine, hook-and-ladder, hose or supply company or salvage corps of any city, town, township, borough or fire district of this State.

Mr. Matthews explained that the bill came from the association. Mr. McLaughlin stated that the bill provided for exempts only "something to which they are entitled."

The bill went through unanimously.

SLAYER SHOWS NERVE AT POTTSVILLE HANGING.

A remarkable display of nerve was made in the county jailyard in Pottsville, Pa., yesterday, by Joseph Christock, who was hanged for the murder last fall of Mrs. Ann Richards. Declining the proffered assistance of a priest and deputy sheriff, the man walked smilingly from his cell to the foot of the gallows and ran lightly up the steps. It was a public hanging and before him stood 1,500 persons, to whom he waved his hand. Then he reached up, grasped the noose and placed it around his neck, put his arms by his side to be strapped and, smilingly said "Good-by, all." The nervy man then held his head in position for the adjustment of the black cap and in another moment the trap was sprung. He was dead in twelve minutes.

Before going to the gallows Christock made a complete confession, declaring he had shot the woman when he was detected by her attempting to mistreat her daughter. He told of numerous highway robberies and burglaries he had committed in the neighborhood, and wound up his confession by saying that he deserved to be hanged for his crimes. He joked of death to the very end.

Christock astounded the sheriff Wednesday by requesting that his execution take place in the open in the courtyard instead of the prison yard. He said as this was likely to be the last execution by hanging that his plea should be complied with.

When the carpenters started work on his scaffold he was asked whether the hammering jarred on his nerves or interfered with his religious devotions. On the contrary, he laughingly said he did not mind it in the least, and urged the under-warden to let him assist in the work.

DAINTY APRONS FOR GIRLS.

The jog of wearing dainty aprons is growing among girls. While they are not more than a handful of lingerie beauty, they are more practical than is supposed.

Dotted swiss, large or small dots; stripped or cross barred dimities or muslins, fine handkerchief linen, flowered dimities of muslin, flowered or dotted silk batistes are, all of them, beautiful materials for aprons. So are the plain swisses. Valenciennes, torchon, Cluny, as well as many other laces are suitable for trimming.

A tiny heart-shaped apron of plaid or cross-barred material needs to have the edge finished with a narrow lace insertion and edge. Make a small heart-shaped pocket, turn the edges under, and whip a ace edge to it, then baste it in position on the apron and backstitch on. First it must be finished across the top by hemming and whipping the ace on.

Dotted swiss or muslin can be embellished by embroidering over the dots, using several colors, making one dot blue, another pink and perhaps a third green. Then still another way is to make stars, using a dot for a centre. Daisies also are embroidered, using a dot as a centre.

A pretty and useful apron can be made in the three gores, extending the middle gore up into a rounding shaped bib, giving a princess effect. Shape the bottom of the apron to form three curving or scalloped edges having a gore form a scallop. Set a pocket on each side gore before putting the seams together, letting the pocket take the shape of the gore from the bottom to half the apron depth. Of course, these must be finished across the top before setting them on the gores.

The waistband starts each side from the front gore, so as not to destroy the princess effect.

FOLLY OF SCEPTICISM.

As a man of pleasure, by a vain attempt to be more happy than any man can be, is often more miserable than most men are, so the sceptic, in a vain attempt to be wise beyond whot is permitted to man, plunges into a darkness more deplorable and a blindness more incurable than that of the common herd ,whom he despises and would fain instruct. For the more precious the gift the more pernicious ever will be the abuse of it, as the most powerful medicines are the most dangerous if misapplied, and no error is so remediless as that which arises, not from the exclusion of wisdom, but from its perversion.

The sceptic, when he plunges into the depths of infidelity, like the miser who leaps from the shipwreck, will find that the treasures which he bears about him will only sink him deeper in the abyss.

Harry Lajoie, the Cleveland swatsmith, won the game for the Naps Wednesday against the New Orleans team. The big Frenchman poled out a single and a pair of double-deckers when they were needed. The score was 6 to 3.

August Herrmann, who is one of the directors of the National League, said when told that Mrs. Britton is likely to be president of the St. Louis club, and therefore become a member of the National League, that there is nothing in baseball rules to prevent her from serving.

The New York American second squad, under the leadership of Duke Farrell, defeated the Petersburg, Va., club Wednesday afternoon in a heavy hitting game by a score of 8 to 3.

Chief Meyers and Red Murray, of the Giants, each made three hits Wednesday in the game against the Atlanta club. One of Murray's hits was good for three-quarters of the distance.

Earl Mack, the son of Connie Mack, is playing a good game for the Athletic Yannigans. Mack, who is doing most of the catching for the youngsters, is hitting the sphere in good style. He was credited with four hits Wednesday against the Augusta team, including a two-bagger.

Eddie Kieber, who was with the Newark Indians for a while last season, is coaching the Rochester University team this season.

Three of the Washington players are on the injured list. GOLF.

Stewart Gardner, who has arrived at the Exmoor Country Club, Chicago, after spending the winter in Scotland, is authority for the statement that James Braid, the five-times open champion of Great Britain, is coming to this country to play in the American open. Tom Vardon also has been mentioned. The last named is due here, anyway, as he has an engagement with the Onwentsia Club. As for Braid, the announcement was made abroad a short time ago that he would not visit the United States.

According to the program issued by the Country Club of Lakewood the usual provision has been made for four sixteens. In conjunction with the thirty-six-hole medal play qualifying round on Thursday, April 20, there will be a team match open to teams of four members from clubs belonging to the United States Golf Association. All match rounds will be at eighteen holes. An eighteen-hole medal play handicap has also been carded for the last day.

MISSIONARY JUBILEE COMES TO A CLOSE

The greatest missionary jubilee ever held anywhere at any time, according to the records, came to a conclusion last evening in Carnegie Hall, New York, when nearly a million dollars was subscribed for foreign missions by members of Christian churches in the Eastern States. The service, which included speeches and appeals for funds, was made more enjoyable by the singing of a chorus of five hundred voices. More than fifty Plainfield women attended the two sessions of the day and when the final count was made of the pledges for support all but a few thousand dollars was found to have been subscribed for the work. This did not satisfy the missionary workers and after a spirited talk by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, the million was practically secured.

The day began with a conference at 10 o'clock in the morning at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, followed by "drawing room" meetings at which discussions of a heart to heart nature took place. At 1 o'clock there was a missionary luncheon in the Hotel Astor and the final endeavor was made at Carnegie Hall in the evening at 8 o'clock, when speeches were made by several distinguished people, including Mrs. Montgomery.

Mrs. Gabriel Reid Maguire, when questioned this morning as to the amount subscribed for the missionary movement in this city said that there was no way of finding out the exact amount, but that she believed the women of Plainfield had held their own in the matter of supplying funds for the conversion of the heathen. The exact figures will not be available for several days.

CONFERENCE OF WOMEN'S PROBLEMS AT PRINCETON.

Many delegates from the various women's clubs in this city will attend the New Jersey Conference of Charities and Correction, which opens Sunday at Princeton, and continues until Tuesday afternoon.

Governor Wilson and several university professors will make addresses as will also men and women from all parts of the State, who are interested in the work.

The people of Princeton have opened their homes for the entertainment of delegaes and others attending the conference, and the local hospitality committee at Princeton has arranged luncheons, teas and receptions.

BILL TO GIVE MEDALS TO GUARDSMEN PASSES

Colonel Robert L. Patterson, of Elizabeth, is behind a bill which has just passed the House providing for the granting of service medals to men who have served for fifteen years in the National Guard in this State, ten years of the service to have been continuous. The drafting of the bill was caused by the discontent among the officers and men of the companies which were disbanded by order of Governor Foster M. Voorhees at the close of the Spanish-American War.

At this time there were many men who had served several years in the guard and yet not long enough to be entitled to the service medals. These men were practically thrown out of their places and had no chance to obtain the medals by re-enlisting in some other regiment. Colonel Patterson was one of these men and had served eleven years in the guard when the order came to disband.

As soon as possible he re-entered the service in another regiment and began active work for the securing of a means whereby the medals might be acquired. The Attorney-General of the State informed Colonel Patterson and others that the only way in which they could secure redress was by means of a new act of the Legislature. One or two such acts were drawn up, but have never amounted to anything because those who drafted them up never pushed them.

A bill has now been drawn up and has passed the House whereby a guardsman who has served fifteen years, ten of which have been consecutive, will be given the fifteen-year service medal. This medal is the same in all respects as the fifteen-year medal, except that it has on it the number of years the wearer has served.

Colonel Patterson feels that if this bill passes the Senate, as he is confident it will, the men who have served so many years will have the honor of wearing the medal to which they are by right entitled.

Number 3
THE IMITATORS

Many little pressing tailor shops claim to do Dry Cleaning. These are the magicians. These the people who simply take in your clothes, brush out the dust, remove such spots as they can, pressing fairly well. Your clothing is then sent home and after a few days the spots reappear. You naturally condemn Dry Cleaning, when in truth your garments have only been sponged and pressed.

You should send your clothes here. We dust them properly, having the right equipment. Then we put your garments in just the right bath for their special needs, depending upon condition, texture, etc. Drying and airing after cleaning is accomplished here under the most sanitary and perfect conditions.

Send your next work to us—if you appreciate quality.

WARRANTS OUT FOR TARDY ASSEMBLYMEN

Because of the absence of many members of the House of Assembly at Trenton yesterday, it was almost impossible to transact any business. Speaker Kenny was so incensed that he ordered warrants issued for the arrest of a number of the Assemblymen, and unless they appear in their places on Monday evening the warrants will be served. The Speaker has served notice that the work of the House must be taken seriously. He has determined that all of the business must be out of the way by the middle of April, and if this is to be done strict attention must be paid by the members.

Those for whom warrants were issued yesterday were Bacharach, Backus, Boettner, Bracken, Brodhead, Christie, Cole, Davidson, Donnelly, Egan, Ford, Griffin, Leveen, Martin, McGowan, McGrath, Shavleria, Simpson and Thompson. James H. McMahon, one of the officers of the House, has been summoned to appear on Tuesday morning and tell why he was not present yesterday to attend to his work.

When Senator Fielder's bill to permit Jersey City to supply water to other municipalities came up there was a lively fight, and after a vigorous attack by Assemblyman McCran, Republican leader, it was decided to lay the bill over. An important bill passed was the Brown bill, which prohibits the employment of women for more than ten hours in any one day. The James bill permitting the delivery of liquor in bulk outside of the license bounds in the bottler's license was passed. The temperance element of the State is against this measure and it will meet with vigorous opposition in the Senate.

There was a battle in the House yesterday in an attempt to recommit the Meyers bill, which is designed to get rid of some of the decrepit officers of the national guard. If passed it would be impossible for former Adjutant General Bretnall to oust General Sadler, no matter how the courts decided. The Sadler forces won out yesterday, and the bill stays before the House for final passage.

There was much comment over the visit of former Assemblyman William B. Martin and Edmund Osborn, of Essex, and J. Frank Higgins and Edgar Bacon, Hudson Progressive Republicans, to Governor Wilson to urge the selection of George L. Record, of Jersey City, to the State Board of Assessors to succeed Theodore Strong, the Middlesex "boss." The Governor told them he would take the matter under advisement.

bill. He received a batch of letters yesterday morning from different persons in the county, showing some concern lest the bill should be passed. "Some Democrats would have the office remain," he said, "no doubt, because they believe that it would be a good berth for someone in 1914. But—we hold different views."

When Mr. Brodhead was told of the volume of business to be handled in the registrar's office he did not evince any surprise, but still stuck to his view that the office could as well be conducted under the supervision of the County Clerk. In 1910 12,587 documents fere recorded in the office. The gross income in 1904, when Frank H. Smith was first elected, was $14,461.76. Last year the gross income amounted to $21,098.99. In 1904 the population of the county was 99,000. The present population is estimated at 140,000. Hudson county established its office in 1874 when the population was 163,000, and Camden established its office in 1875 with a population of 52,994. The Union county office has eleven employes, 1,023 books of record, 941 property maps and scores of index books. It is by far the largest office as regards the work done.

"I do not doubt but that the office is conducted in the best manner possible," Mr. Brodhead said. "I have no political purpose whatever in the introduction of the bill. No one has come to me and asked me to put this bill in. It is an act of my own volition. I think the office is unnecessary."

Mr. Brodhead discussed incidentally some of the provisions of the Geran bill. He was not in favor of the proposed civil service system of appointing election officers and he did not entirely approve of that provision whereby county chairmen will be voted for at the primary the same as the committeemen. "I believe it sufficient that we elect the committeemen at the primaries and permit them to elect their own chairman," he said.

He approved of the blanket ballot which the bill provides and declared that he thought it a fair and just way to put the candidates before the voter. Concerning the extra expense which it is said the bill will incur on municipalities throughout the State, he declared he believed that the expense would be considerably more than heretofore, but he believed the merits of the bill warranted it.

The corrupt practices act put through the House Mr. Brodhead evidently was not in sympathy with. It was on his motion that the bill was recommitted for revision when passed on its first readings. "The bill was never revised," he declared last night, "and there are some provisions in it through which one could drive a horse and wagon."

Shedd, aged seventy years, who for more than forty years was a passenger engineer in the employ of the New Jersey Central, died at his home in Somerville, Tuesday night, and the funeral will take place at the late home tomorrow afternoon. SOLILOQUIES OF A BENEDICT.

A man capable of giving advice shows his wisdom by not scattering it broadcast.

We worry so much over little things that they often grow to be big ones.

Very often the quickest way to lose a friend is to loan him money.

Silence may be golden but a wife would rather have her husband converse with her when he comes home.

Man can forgive almost anything in this world but ingratitude.

Couldn't Prove it by Casey.

The case concerned a will and Casey was called as a witness.

"Was the deceased in the habit of talking to himself when he was alone?" asked the lawyer.

"I don't know," said Casey.

"Come, come, you don't know, and yet you pretend that you were intimately acquainted with him?" said the lawyer.

"Well, sir," said Casey, "I never happened to be with him when he was alone."—National Monthly.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

Ethel Barrymore will be seen at the Plainfield theatre tomorrow night when Charles Frohman presents her in a double bill that is rich in promise. This bill will consist of "Alice Sit-by-the-Fire" to be followed by the playlet, "The Twelve Pound Look." Both plays are from the pen of the Scotch dramatists, James Matthew Barrie, whose many charming contributions to the stage have endeared him to the theatregoers of two countries. The bill was the chief offering during Miss Barrymore's long season in New York and is one that is notable for its strength, its satire, its wit and its genuine appeal to the human sympathies and emotions. Further than this the two plays show Miss Barrymore in roles in which she rises to distinction. While "Alice Sit-by-the-Fire" is not new it will be none the less welcome. The play was originally produced during the season of 1905-06 by Miss Barrymore and the combination of the play and of the gifted actress was one that made for considerable success. The comedy will be recalled as a delightfully satirical comment on the relations of the sexes. With that deep insight into human nature which he has shown in all of his plays Barrie takes an English army officer stationed in India and sends him and his wife home to England to meet the daughter and son from whom they have been parted for a long time. The mother has long dreamed of her daughter, craved for her love and to be near her. But what does she find? That she is a stranger in her own home, that the child from whom she has so long been parted has had her little head filled with silly notions for which eratic problem plays are responsible, and that she sees wrong and guilt in the simplest and most innocent of social duties.

"A Trip to Africa," the latest musical song hit in three acts, presented by the Black Patti Musical Comedy Company, will be presented at the Plainfield theatre next Tuesday night. This attraction is conceded to be one of the best colored comedies traveling. Music and song are combined together in a delightful way, and the funny situations in the play will keep you laughing continually. It is seldom that a company visits us that is as highly endorsed by the press and public as is the Black Patti Musical Comedy Company.

ROSTAND'S BARNYARD DRAMA IS MAGNIFICENT.

Maude Adams' "Chantecler" has caught the public's fancy as no other piece has done since "Peter Pan." Those who have seen the magnificent production at the Knickerbocker theatre, New York, have found more in this charming woman's interpretation of Rostand's barnyard drama than the strange beauty of scene, the exquisite poetry of its lines, and the whimsical humor of speaking birds and animals that excited the wonder of all Europe. They have discovered that Miss Adams, with her rare personality, and broad sympathies has breathed into the remarkable play a great message and one of peculiar significance to every American man and woman. It is the message of work,—that no matter what the discouragements may be, man's greatest joy in life lies in his complete belief in and faithfulness to his chosen work. "Chantecler" is made by Miss Adams a drama of a beautiful dreamer, striving and battling against one obstacle after another in some form of nature,—birds, animals, and, foremost of all, the Night. And the message is all the nobler when Chantecler, finding that his crow does not bring the dawn—valiantly goes on with his chosen work, that the others who come after him may find the task easier, until in the end there is no more night—that is, no more failure.

Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., is rapidly completing its plans for the observance of Memorial Day, and they will be announced within a short time.

Henry Hansen, of Court Plainfield, No. 1144, Independent Order Foresters, is one of the State delegates to the conference of the supreme court to be held in Toronto, May 2-12.

WEARING OF THE VEIL.

"There is such art in the wearing of a veil!" said the pretty French woman to me yesterday. "The English wear them abominably; the Germans simply dispense with them; the Americans—well, the Americans are teachable."

And she proceeded to teach.

The white net veil, with its deep lace border is meant to wear with a high crown and not a too wide brim. The proper method is to drape it in rather loose folds over the crown, letting it fall as far down as the shoulders in front and quite far down the back. Gather it at the back of the hat into a loose knot, fasten by a small bar pin and let this fold hang over the back of the veil. The two edges should overlap so that there is no unsightly opening.

The tight veil is the hardest of all to wear, since if it is too loose it is ugly. It should be brought high up over the crown, fastened in front by a pin and then folded, not gathered, until it meets at the back. There another pin should fasten it, without a knot. Now gather up the loose ends at the bottom and fasten them to your hair by an invisible hairpin.

The very wide, thin veil worn so much today must be puffed over the hatbrim to allow for its excessive width. Fasten it to the hat with about half a dozen small pins, one for each fold or puff, and see that the edges in back overlap sufficiently. Another tiny pin near the bottom of the veil will hold them in place.

Over a fur or beaver hat a heavier veil must be worn. One pretty way to arrange this is to fold the veil plainly over the brim in front, but to gather all the superfluous fulness into a puff on each side, fastened by a pin. Then in back another smaller puff will hold the two edges in position. This is very artistic and fetching.

So here is what the pretty French woman told me. Since you are an American follow her advice and prove that you are teachable.

A NEW TRIMMING.

Not exactly tha, yet one does not quite know what to call it. Here is a Paris gown—corn-color chiffon cloth over yellow silk. The trimming—what is it? "Dresden ribbon," you will say at first. But look! The ribbon is gold tissue, stiff and shining, and yet, somehow, the pink roses and green leaves are woven into it and, as it were, veiled with gold. Could anything be lovlier?

Yes, for on the bodice the same bon appears—this time cut so as to admit inserts of heavy ecru lace, through which the chiffon cloth shows. It is the acme of richness and of beauty—a symprony in gold.

This metal Dresden ribbon, as it may be called, cohes in silver also. Imagine it with a gown of deep silvery blue, the ribbon itself sprinkled daringly with violets! Or in copper, with dull geranium and a gown of deep cream silk crepe! And always it is edged with satin of an appropriate color—brown with gold, blue or green with silver, dull red with the cooper.

It is the most stunning trimming Paris has ever sent us.

WHAT RAILROADS SPEND.

The greatest customers of the mills and factories are the railroads. The latter are ready and eager to continue the work of extension and improvements planned years ago during the periad of prosperity which culminated in 1907. In one estimate they figured on the expenditure, if they had the money to spend, of a billion dollars a year.

They are spending almost at this rate before the panic. Readers who remember the prosperity of only a few years ago need not be told that it was beased on the enormous expenditures of the railroads not only for common day labor, but for the bricklayers, the carpenters, the workers in metal, the furniture makers, the iron and steel waker and the skilled artisan in all the various craft which have to do with the construction, maintenance and equipment of railroads.—Leslie's.

AFTER THE BACHELORS.

They are after the bachelors in Massachusetts, the women are. Under the leadership of Mrs. Charlotte Smith, they have presented a bill to the Legislature imposing a tax of $5 per annum on every unmarried man above the age of 25 years, unless he can satisfy the assessors that he is not of good moral character or is otherwise unfitted for matrimony. The funds so obtained are to be expended by the overseers of the poor for support of deserving spinsters who have passed, or are believed to have passed the marriageable age. What is even more to the purpose, the committee on taxation has agreed to report the bill with a favorable recommendation. The married men on the committee supported it and obtained a majority vote with the aid of one bachelor who proved disloyal to his kind.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

He Knew.

The stranger laid down four aces and scooped in the pot.

"This game ain't on the level," protested Sagebrush Sam, at the same time producing a gun to lend force to his accusations. "That ain't the hand I dealt ye."—Lippincott's Magazine.

TROUT SEASON OPENS IN JERSEY TOMORROW

Fishermen who delight in the scientific part of the sport which requires adroit casting of flies upon the surface of the waters of mountain brooks and other streams where trout abound are making active preparations for the opening of the New Jersey trout fishing season tomorrow. Rods, lines, reels, flies, hooks, baskets and every appurtenance of the sport are being gone over and put into the best possible conditions, maps of various sections of the State are being consulted and marked, hotel and boarding-house rates in country and mountain districts are being obtained by letter, and automobile parties of fishermen are being arranged to go in pursuit of the beauties of the fish products of brooks and the upper reaches of some of the rivers of the State where the water is clear and cool, and has not yet felt the contaminating influence of the more thickly populated sections.

There are many good trout streams in New Jersey, some of which are a comparatively short distance from Newark and the other large cities. They are known to the devotees of the sport, each of whom has his favorite place to hike for at the opening of and during the season, though each is also ready to make a try for trout in any new place which may give promise of success in the making of a fair catch. This year the automobile will play a larger and more important part in the trout fishing of this and other States than ever before, as busy men who cannot spare more than an occasional few hours to devote to the sport on any given day or in any one week outside their regular vacation time have found that with their motor cars they can run into the country and to some favorite stream or pool where the trout lie in the cool waters, spend an hour or two in casting and seeking to make the spotted beauties rise to their flies, and then get back to the city early in the evening, if they have chosen the afternoon for the trip, or by noon if they have taken the morning for their little bit of indulgence in their favorite pastime.

STATE B. AND L. ASS'NS TO MEET ON APRIL 20

The next meeting of the executive committee of the New Jersey League of Building and Loan Associations will be held in Paterson on April 20, when it is planned to have State Banking and Insurance Commissioner Vivian M. Lewis make the chief address. Further plans for the meeting are being completed by Secretary George Brown, Jr., of Newark. Some of Plainfield's building and Loan Associations will be represented.

Joseph A. McNamee, of Atlantic City, president of the league, will preside at the meeting, when Secretary Brown and other officers will make their annual reports. Mr. Brown, it is said, will make a report of the unusual accession in membership since the Newark meeting, and will point out that large and small associations alike are looking toward the league and its work and evincing a desire to be a part of the State organization. One of the largest associations recently received in membership is the West End, of Newark, which is in the million dollar asset class. Other large associations, it is said, are contemplating joining the association within a few weeks.

It is probable that the proposal to have the associations of New Jersey, through the league, join officially in plan of holding an International Building and Loan Congress in Berlin or London during the summer of 1913 will be taken up.

Other matters of especial importance will come up before the session. Every association of the 600 in the State has been given a copy of the proceedings of the last meeting held in Newark. Each association has been urged to send delegates to the Paterson meeting and it is expected that the attendance will be fully 200.

At the meeting the present status of the Federal excise tax law affecting building and loan associations will be made known.

The following realty transfers of local properties have been recorded in the office of County Registrar F. H. Smith at Elizabeth: H. Lee Bragg to Highland Park Realty Company, northerly side of Evergreen avenue, 365 feet feet westerly of Woodland avenue, Plainfield, $1; Patrick J. —Among the specialties at Neuman Bros. are his famous seed potatoes, comprising Early Rose, Green Mountain, Irish Cobblers and Early Queen, which are considered the best in the market. Now is the time to purchase seed potatoes and Neuman Bros. can supply you.

Rev. F. St. John Fitch, of Park avenue, will occupy the pulpit of the Madison Avenue Baptist church, Paterson, Sunday morning and evening.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning April 2, 1911.

Topic.—Lessons from great lives.—IV. Joshua.—Josh. i, 1-11. (Consecration meeting.) Edited by Rev. Sherman H. Doyle, D. D.

"The proper study of mankind is man." Few studies are more profitable. No man ever yet lived whose life cannot teach us some useful lesson. The lives of some men can teach us many. Intent upon making the most of our own lives, we should seek instruction from the great characters of history. Who were they? What talents did they possess? What obstacles did they overcome? What was the secret of their success? Wherein did they fail? Approaching these men of the past with such questions upon our lips, we are surprised to find what valuable messages they have to give us. Many young men and many young women have come to be morally strong and have been inspired to high and noble endeavor by reading the biography of some noble, heroic soul.

Such a soul was Joshua. He filled a great man's place in a great way. He accomplished a most difficult work. The history of his life teaches many truths. Think of these four only:

1. The value of fidelity. For years Joshua had occupied an inferior position. He was known as Moses' minister. What his duties were we do not know. It is enough to know that he accepted them and fulfilled them in the spirit of faithfulness. Because he had a faithful past God made him leader of his people Isreal. Do you fill an humble place? In what spirit are you filling it? You will never hear God's voice saying "Come up higher!" unless you are putting your best into your present task. Them that honor God, God will honor. "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee the crown of life."

2. Joshua accepted his work as from God. It was God who had called him to it. That gave him power in it. That made him triumph over its difficulties. Has God called you to some work? Then you can do it. You can do anything that God wants you to do. A divine call means a divine equipment. Think of Paul. Think of Luther. Think of all men who have achieved great things for God. If you accept your work as from God, undertake it in His strength, carry it on by His help, you will abundantly succeed.

3. Joshua had God's presence. "As I was with Moses, so I will be with thee; I will not fail thee nor forsake thee." That was the great secret of Joshua's courage—yes, and of his success. It is told of the soldiers of Napoleon that when he was on the heights, watching them as they fought, the knowledge that his eye was upon them inspired them to noble and heroic deeds. But when he came down into their midst his presence made them invincible. Our Lord does not watch us from the heights. "I am with you alway." Do we practice His presence? Do we look to Him for strength? That means success, both in our character and in our work.

4. Joshua had God's promise of success. Therefore, weak though he felt himself to be, hard as he knew his task would prove, he did not despair. God wants no man to fail as a Christian, either in his life or in his work. But certain conditions must be honored if we are to succeed. We must accept our life and work as from God. We must depend upon Him for guidance and for grace. We must treasure His word in our hearts and believe He is with us. The conditions are very simple, but they mean a life surrendered to do God's will. Are you living such a life?

BIBLE READINGS.

Ps. xxv, 14; xxvii, 14; xxxi 24; Matt. xxiii, 12; Acts ix, 1-9; Rom. xii, 1, 2; Phil. ii; Jas. iv, 10.

Belief In the Movement.

I believe in Christian Endeavor because it is the thing that is needed in the church. Nothing has yet been devised that can take its place. The Sunday school is the place where the young are taught the principles and the lessons of the Bible, but the Christian Endeavor society is the place where they are given the opportunity to put these principles into practice. They are not only given the opportunity; they are organized into committees for the express purpose to show them how they may serve the Lord Christ. Just as industrial education makes better workmen so does Christian Endeavor, which is the practice school of the church, make more efficient Christians.

I believe in Christian Endeavor because it is trying to bridge the gap between the Sunday school and church membership. I believe in it because of its hope, because of the ideal of service it presents, because of its loyalty to the church, because of its loyalty to the denomination and because of its broad fellowship with all that love the Lord Jesus.—Rev. R. P. Anderson.

The Keystone State Secretary.

Secretary Shartle before leaving to take up his work in Boston sends a message to the Endeavorers of Pennsylvania through the Secretary's Bulletin. During the year that is gone he has reached 1,835 societies, has visited 61 counties, has 322 addresses and conferences to his credit and has traveled 19,407 miles at no cost to the union.

During the last two years fifteen new local unions and ten new county unions were organized, while more than 500 new societies were organized, reorganized or discovered.

CRETONNE WRITING SET.

For the maid who loves white enameled furniture and dimity curtains and dresden china toilet articles nothing could be more charming than a cretonne-covered writing set for the boudoir desk. It is especially appropriate in a simple rosebud design for a young girl.

First there is the big blotter, the foundation cut out of heavy cardboard after a leather model and the cretonne carefully pasted on, with tiny stitches to round the corners properly. A narrow gimp edging may be used if desired, but if you can do the work neatly enough it is really prettier without.

Next in order is the set of notebooks, ranging from the big diary to the little address book, and each neatly bound. Here the gilt or green gimp is more in order, but you may suit your own tastes about that.

Calendar (the cards for the perpetual variety may be brought, with a light, cheap frame, at any stationer's) and picture frames belong together; and after them come the little boxes for pen points, elastics, etc. These may be merely little jewelry boxes lined with silk or velvet or, better, gray chamois.

There are three articles which must not be included in this set. These are the ink well and pen tray because of the danger of staining them, and the candlesticks, because of that of fire. But if you wish your set to be complete, you can get these in dresden china, with a little clock to match, in a design closely approximating that of the cretonne. Perhaps it would be better to buy the china first and match the cretonne from it.

All sorts of smaller articles, such as little blotters, penwipers, papercutters, etc., may be covered with the pretty fabric. Of course, brocaded silk may be used instead if you desire to make the set a more expensive one.

And by the way, give a piece of the plain fabric with your present, or get it extra if you are making the set for yourself. For accidents will happen, and first aid is a useful thing to have at hand.

"A CRUSADE FOR THE CHILD."

Those who feel most deeply the importance of child-saving instist that there are additional measures that should be undertaken without loss of time. It is urged, for instance, as a matter of immediate necessity, that State relief be provided for impoverished widowed mothers with families of young children. Generally speaking, a mother cannot protect her children in even the crudest sense and at the same time earn the money for their supoprt. If she is allowed to remain in her dreadful dilemma, the children of such a family are therefore practically wasted, lost to the State. A measure that would cover this and other difficulties and for which much might rationally be urged is State endowment of motherhood. But an innovation so radical as this would naturally have to defer in point of time to others of readier acceptance. But there is general agreement that an admirable point of departure for all further efoms in this geneal direction would be the passage of the bill, now for some time pending in Congress, recommending a Federal Children's Bureau. This measure was originally the conception of Miss Lillian D. Wald, of the Henry street Settlement of New York city, but has since been urged by practically all persons equipped to discuss the subject with authority. It is conceded that such an institution would be a very great aid to all workers for the good of the child and that it would also operate as a moral force, a deterrent of injustice.—The North American Review.

SOLILOQUIES OF A BENEDICT.

Most of us try to make our wives believe the only thing we lack is a halo.

Strange how long it takes to pay for the coal that so quickly disappears.

Many a man has found it easier to get into debt than out of it.

When the rejected lover declares he will do something desperate he marries the other girl.

A little praise from wifey will often spur a person on to greater efforts.

Heart-Testing Stations.

Two hospitals in America are now equipped with what may be called heart-testing stations, says a writer in "Success Magazine." Marvelously delicate instruments for the measurement and recording of the electrical waves given out by the heart have lately been brought to America and installed by Johns Hopkins University Hospital, Baltimore, and the Presbyterian Hospital, New York. By means of this device the faintest possible trace of irregularity may be detected and recorded in the form of diagrams. This is, of course, of infinitely greater value than the present methods of testing heartbeats by ear. Another feature of the new device is that the observation may be taken over a wire of considerable length, thereby suggesting the possibility of some day having every physician's office connected by wire with a central heart-testing station.

At the Parting of the Ways

By Francis A. Corey

(Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.)

Lying back in her big easy chair with the red firelight playing over her jewels and laces, Mrs. Taylor Peyton was a picture of luxurious ease. Young, beautiful, fabulously rich, the prizes of life had been showered lavishly upon her. Lois Barton could not understand why her proud face wore that look of weary discontent.

This six weeks' visit with her city cousin had given to Lois, herself, her one taste of real luxury. It was all very wonderful. She felt, sometimes, like a person transported to a land of enchantment. She had enjoyed every moment. But her visit was drawing to a close. Soon, she must return to the drudgery of the school room.

A flush sprang to her cheeks, kindled by a sudden thought. She, too, could live in a beautiful house with servants at her beck and call—buy her gowns at the big shops patronized by her cousin Virginia! Fate had thrown a golden apple in her way. She need not go back to the old treadmill round, the uncongenial tasks, unless she chose to.

But—Ward Winthrop! Well, what of him? It was two years since he had left Surry without bidding her goodby. In all probability she would never see him again. The surest cure for her aching heart was to set up the image of another in the shrine so long kept sacred to him.

Meanwhile Virginia Peyton, on the other side of the dancing fire, was looking her over approvingly.

"My dear," she said, "that simple white gown is in excellent taste. A country girl shouldn't make herself too smart at city functions. I wanted you to look your best tonight, Gordon Vance will be at the reception. He is very fastidious. With men of his temperament, trifles turn the scale. I shall let him know that you return home the last of the week. I think he will come to the point before the evening is over."

"Oh, I hope not!" Lois exclaimed with a sudden revulsion of feeling.

She was too genuine to pretend not to understand.

Mrs. Peyton frowned. "Of course you have known what was coming. Ever since the acquaintance began he has been sending you flowers, taking you to lunch and to ride. It's better that everything should be settled before you go."

"But I'm not at all sure—"

"That you want to marry him? Why of course you'll marry him. He can give you everything—wealth, position, influence. It's a wonderful opportunity to come in the way of a country school teacher."

"But—if I do not love him?"

Mrs. Peyton laughed scornfully. "Love! Oh, you little ninny! Nobody marries for love nowadays. It's money that counts."

Lois understood now what had brought about Virginia's marriage with the bald, elderly man she met occasionally at the dinner table.

"You always lacked worldly wisdom," Mrs. Peyton added with some asperity. "But for my intervention you would have thrown yourself away on Ward Winthrop two years ago—a struggling artist without a dollar."

Lois' face became white. Instantly she was on her feet.

"Virginia," she gasped, "I never understood why Ward went without a word. I had felt so sure that he—he—cared. You were visiting me at the time I remember. Did you—send him—away?"

"Of course not, you little fool! How can you think it?"

Lois leaned forward, trembling slightly, and looked straight into her cousin's guilty face. But before she could speak one of the maids appeared to announce the carriage, and she slipped thoughtfully into her wraps.

Mrs. Vandyke's parlors were filled to overflowing with fashionably dressed men and women. It was the usual crush—music, flowers, ravishing toilets. As the newcomers were making the slow round of the rooms Virginia Peyton dropped a sharp whisper into her companion's ear.

"Look! There he is! He's coming this way. This may be your last chance, remember!"

Gordon Vance paused beside them, his handsome face deeply flushed. "I was watching for you, Miss Barton," he said.

Lois' eyes drooped under his ardent gaze. She was at the parting of the ways. The momentous question must soon be answered, and the thought terrified her. There was a cowardly impulse to run away—escape from it all.

But marriage with this man meant the elimination of many bitter-sweet memories from her sore heart. Gordon Vance was cultivated, agreeable—she might love him in time. The prospect of becoming his wife would have dazzled most girls in her position. It would be madness to throw away this matrimonial prize.

"Let us find a quiet spot where we can talk," he pleaded presently. "I have something particular to say to you."

Lois gave a frightened gasp. Glancing around, as if for protection, she saw her cousin suddenly change color, stare right ahead with tense expression, then wheel about and come swiftly toward her.

"I'm faint—ill! These rooms are stifling," Virginia panted. "Please take me home, Mr. Vance. Lois, get your wraps and come quickly."

But Lois' suspicions had been aroused by this sudden indisposition. Glancing curiously toward the upper end of the long room she saw a tall, distinguished-looking man talking animatedly with their hostess. It was Ward Winthrop!

One long-drawn, startled breath, and the girl's sweet lips came together in a straight line. A dozen thronging emotions all at once resolved themselves into a fixed determination. Virginia put out a detaining hand, but she shook it off.

"I mean to know the truth," she said in a resolute voice.

"Have you no pride—no shame?" Virginia cried angrily. "After that man's shabby treatment!"

Ward Winthrop flushed, then paled, when he saw her coming. His eyes had been drawn to her face as by a magnet. Something in her expression quickly changed his cold nod of recognition into a cordial handclasp.

"You, Lois? What a surprise! I'm delighted to see you again."

He looked at her wistfully, with curious intentness. Mrs. Vandyke, conscious of something unusual in the situation, discreetly turned away. The two were left standing by themselves. Lois could hear the pounding of her own heart above the throb of the music, the babble of gay voices; but the man's eager face swam mistily before her eyes.

"Lois, dear, what is it?" he bent to whisper. "Do you feel that you made a mistake in not answering my letter two years ago?"

"Your letter?" she repeated. "I received no letter from you."

"I wrote the morning I left Surry, giving the address to which an answer was to be sent. I was called away unexpectedly. I hadn't time to come and bid you goodby. I asked you in that letter if you would marry me when I won out. I watched the mails for many days, but no answer ever came. Of course, I concluded you had taken that way to let me know my hopes were futile."

A sudden brightness went over Lois' face like a flood of spring sunshine.

"Your letter never reached me, Ward," she said softly. "I think I understand why—"

"What would you have answered if it had?" he interrupted eagerly. "That is what matters. I can ask you to marry me with a clear conscience. For I have made good! Fame and fortune are mine. I love you more than ever. Have I any chance of winning what is of greater consequence to me than anything else in the whole world?"

Lois glanced back to where Gordon Vance and Virginia were standing, and a shiver went over her. The next moment she was smiling happily into her lover's face. "Oh, Ward, you did not come too soon," she said in a sobbing whisper. "I was at the parting of the ways. I might have taken the one that led forever away from you!"

Discouraging Race Suicide.

England grants a rebate in taxation to fathers of families; France is considering a bill for paying cash bonuses to government employes with children and the German employes with children and the German borough of Schoeneberg, which comprises a large part of south and southwest Berlin, pays premiums to municipal employes who have more than two children. The increased cost of living has produced a marked tendency toward the two-child standard in German towns. Schoenberg will henceforth pay $2.50 a month to every employe, married or widower, who has three children; $3 a month for four children, $3.75 for five, $4.25 for six, and $5 for families of more than six.

Just Had to Say It.

Pyrrhus had just won his costly victory over the Romans.

"Well," he ejaculated. "I suppose I've got to say it; posterity will expect it of me. But it's such a moldy old chestnut! Here goes: Another such victory and—"

But we shall be more considerate than Pyrrhus was—we shall stop the quotation right here.

An Affront.

"I shall never speak to her again."

"What's the matter now?"

"She received four pickle dishes for wedding presents and mine was the only one she exchanged."—Detroit Free Press.

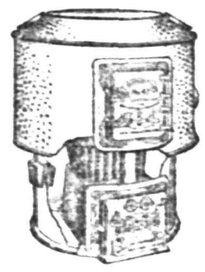
Heating Problems Solved



Sectional view of BOYNTON FURNACE, showing Patented square fire pot and large ash pit.

HERE is the furnace that heats the house from first floor to the attic—makes no dust—little ash, and less bother. A BOYNTON "square pot" furnace will give summer temperature in zero weather, on a surprisingly small amount of coal. It's the square fire pot that does it. The ashes smothers out because the fire pot is full of ashes. A large ash pit gives the fire coal to feed on. BOYNTON has a capacious square corrugated ash pit, that you can shovel out clean. BOYNTON boilers—for house, school, or church heating—have this same economizing pot. Send for our booklet about BOYNTON "square pot" furnaces and boilers.

He had one interview with the captain.

"See here, captain," he said, "I may not want to take a trip this season. I'm that sort of a man. I may or I may not. But if I do want you, I'll want you quick. See?"

With the last word, he looked up suddenly, and the captain "saw," for he met a pair of eyes that astonished him.

"Yes, I see," he answered mechanically.

"And if you're in one place with your boat, and I wire that I want you in another, I'd like you to get there right away," said Mr. Van Torp.

"Yes, sir."

"They say she'll do 22 1-10," continued the owner, "but when I wire I want you I'd like her to do as much more as she can without bursting a lung. If you don't think you've got the kind of engineer who'll keep her red-hot, tell me right off and we'll get another. And don't you fuss about burning coal, captain. And see that the crew get all they can eat and not a drop of drink but tea and coffee, and if you let 'em go on shore once in a way, see that they come home right side up with care, captain, and make each of 'em say 'truly rural' and 'British Constitution' before he goes to bed, and if he can't, you just unship him, or whatever you call it on a boat. Understand, captain?"

"Don't You Fuss About Burning Coal."

The captain understood and kept his countenance.

"Now, I want to know one thing," continued the new owner. "What's the nearest sea port to Bayreuth, Bavaria?"

"Venice," answered the captain without the least hesitation, and so quickly that Mr. Van Torp was immediately suspicious.

"If that's so, you're pretty smart," he observed.

"You can telephone to Cook's office, sir, and ask them," said the captain quietly.

The instrument was on the table at Mr. Van Torp's elbow. He looked sharply at the captain, as he unhooked the receiver and set it to his ear. In a few seconds communication was given.

"Cook's office? Yes. Yes. This is Mr. Van Torp, Rufus Van Torp of New York. Yes. I want to know what's the nearest sea port to Bayreuth, Bavaria. Yes. Yes. That's just what I want to know. Yes. I'll hold the wire while you look it up."

He was not kept waiting long.

"Venice, you say? You're sure you're right, I suppose? Yes. Yes. I was only asking. No thank you. If I want a ticket I'll look in myself. Much obliged. Good-by."

He hung the receiver in its place again, and turned to his captain with a different expression, in which admiration and satisfaction were quite apparent.

"Well," he said, "you're right. It's Venice. I must say that, for an Englishman, you're quite smart."

The captain smiled quietly, but did not think it worth while to explain that the last owner with whom he had sailed had been Wagner-mad and had gone to Bayreuth regularly. Moreover, he had judged his man already.

"Am I to proceed to Venice at once, sir?" he asked.

"As quick as you can, captain."

The Englishman looked at his watch deliberately, and made a short mental calculation before he said anything. It was 11 in the morning.

"I can get to sea by five o'clock this afternoon, sir. Will that do?"

Mr. Van Torp was careful not to betray the least surprise.

"Yes," he said, as if he were not more than fairly satisfied, "that'll do nicely."

"Very well, sir, then I'll be off. It's about 3,000 miles, and she's supposed to do that at 18 knots with her own coal. Say eight days. But as this is her maiden trip we must make allowance for having to stop the engines once or twice. Good-morning, sir."

"Good-day, captain. Get in some coal and provisions as soon as you arrive in Venice. I may want to go to Timbuctoo, or to Andaman islands or something. I'm that sort of a man. I'm not sure where I'll go. Good-by."

The captain stopped at the first telegraph office on his way to the Waterloo station and telegraphed both to his chief engineer, Mr. M'Cosh, and his chief mate, Mr. Johnson, for he thought it barely possible that one or the other might be ashore.

"Must have steam by 4 p. m. to-day to sail at once long voyage. Coming next train. Owner in hurry. Send ashore for my wash. Brown, Captain."

When the clocks struck five on shore that afternoon, and the man at the wheel struck two bells from the wheelhouse, and the lookout forward repeated them on the ship's bell, all according to the most approved modern fashion on large steamers, the beautiful Lancashire Lass was steaming out upon Southampton water.

Out of the merest curiosity Mr. Van Torp telegraphed to Cowes to be informed of the exact moment at which his yacht was under way, and before six o'clock he had a message.

"Yacht sailed at 4.39."

The new owner was so much pleased that he actually smiled, for Capt. Brown had been 21 minutes better than his word.

"I guess he'll do," though Mr. Van Torp. "I only hope I may need him."

He was not at all sure that he should need the Lancashire Lass and Capt. Brown, but it has often been noticed that in the lives of born financiers even their caprices often turn out to their advantage, and that their least logical impulses in business matters are worth more than the sober judgment of ordinary men.

As for Capt. Brown, he was a quiet little person with a ruddy pink face and sparkling blue eyes, and he knew his business. In fact he had passed as extra master. He knew that he was in the service of one of the richest men in the world, and that he commanded a vessel likely to turn out one of the finest yachts afloat, and he did not mean to lose such a berth either by piling up his ship, or by being slow to do whatever his owner wished done, within the boundaries of the possible; but it had been explained to him that his owner might order him to exceed the limits of anything but mere possibility, such, for instance, as those of the law, civil, criminal, national or international.

Mr. Van Torp had solid nerves, but when he had sent his yacht to the only place where he thought he might possibly make use of it, he realized that he was wasting valuable time while Logotheti was making all the running, and his uncommon natural energy, finding nothing to work upon as yet, made him furiously impatient. It seemed to hum and sing in his head, like the steam in an express engine when it is waiting to start.

He had come over to England on an impulse, as soon as he had heard of Cordova's engagement. Until then he had not believed that she would ever accept the Greek, and when he learned from Lady Maud's letter that the fact was announced, he "saw red," and his resolution to prevent the marriage was made then and there. He had no idea how he should carry it out, but he knew that he must either succeed or come to grief in the attempt, for as long as he had any money left, or any strength, he would spend both lavishly for that one purpose.

Yet he did not know how to begin, and his lack of imagination exasperated him beyond measure. He was sleepless and lost his appetite, which had never happened to him before; he stayed on in London instead of going down to his place in Derbyshire, because he was always sure that he meant to start for the continent in a few hours, with an infallible plan for success; but he did not go.

He was meditating on the future one morning, over an almost untouched breakfast, between nine and ten o'clock, when his man Stemp brought a visiting card.

It was a rather large card, bearing in the middle two or three odd-looking signs which meant nothing to him, but underneath them he read in plain characters the single word "Barak."

"Barrack!" grumbled the American. "Oh, the writing's on the back, I see. Now, that's very curious, I must say," he said, after reading the words. "That's very curious," he repeated, laying strong and equal emphasis on the last two words. "Ask him to walk in, Stemp."

"Very good, sir."

Christian Science Pantheistic.

Editor, The Daily Press:—

The Rev. S. A. Perrine, of Newark, states in your issue of February 27, that the essence of Christian Science is Hinduism, because, like Hinduism, "in its essence it is to make men to cease to know and realize that there is a difference between right and wrong, good and evil." Mr. Fairchild, of Passaic, in reply, has shown in your paper of March 7, that this is not true, that Mrs. Eddy's doctrine cannot be identified with that Eastern religion in its attitude toward moral standards. Hinduism denies the difference between good and evil, whereas Christian Science differentiates sharply between them, holding that one is real, and the other unreal.

But when he attempts to show that Christian Science has nothing in common with Hinduism, that it is not pantheistic he fails utterly. Both Mrs. Eddy's teaching and Hinduism rest on a pantheistic basis, and that basis is this: All things are a manifestation of the Eternal. But they draw opposite conclusions from it. Hinduism concludes that therefore evil is to defined as well as the good Christian Science concludes that therefore evil is to be denied as nonexistent and unreal. Hinduism says, God is the All—therefore, evil comes from Him as well as good, and both are equally divine. Christian Science says, God is the All—therefore nothing comes from Him into existence but good and what seems to be its opposite, evil, has no reality. But that proposition, God is All, written on every page of Mrs. Eddy's book, brands it and stamps it indelibly as pantheism. There is no escape from this fact. Let Mrs. Eddy speak for herself in words that cannot be misunderstood.

Science and Health (1905 edition), page 272, lines 29-30: "God is the principle of all that represents Him, and of all that really exists." The logic of the reasoning is this: God is the principle of all that exists; He is not the principle of evil and disease; therefore, they do not exist.

Ibid, page 468, lines 8-9: "All is infinite mind, and iterinfinite manifestation, for God is All in all;" and God is good. Therefore, whatever is contrary to good, as sin, evil, error, is not part of the All, is outside of the All, does not exist.

Page 468, lines 20-21: "Spirit—the synonym of mind, soul or God—is substance; that is, the only real substance."

Page 470, lines 11-16; "Divine Science explains the abstract statement that there is one mind only, by the following self-evident proposition: If God, or good, is real, then evil, the opposite of God, is unreal. Then evil can only seem real, by giving reality to the unreal."

To say that God is the only real substance is to say that God is the sum total of all that exists, it is to say that God is All; and this is Pantheism pure and simple. The very word pantheism means God is All, (Greek, pan-all, theos-God). And this is the fundamental, underlying, bedrock principle of Christian Science.

Of course, it is idealistic pantheism; it has a strong ethical aspect, insisting that God is good, but nevertheless it is pantheism through and through. Page 492, lines 26-28; "God is Mind and God is All, hence all is Mind. On this statement rests the Science of being; and its principle is divine, demonstrating harmony and immortality."

Page 399, lines 29-30; "The one Mind contains no mortal opinions. All that is real is included in this Mind."

Now, argues the disciple of Mrs. Eddy, it is clear that pain, crime, disease, decay, death cannot be included in this Mind, because God is not the author of evil, therefore, the conclusion follows, they are delusions, illusions, mists dreams, fancies, imaginings, false beliefs of the mind, and that mind is the mortal mind." And as we rise under the influence of Divine Science to recognize the supremacy of the God, to realize that we are the reflection of the Eternal principle, these evils cease to work their havoc in the body, yea, we come to see that we have no body at all in the thought of God, for ((page 475) "Man is not matter—made up of brains, blood, bones and other material elements;" page 468, "Man is spiritual and not material." He is co-existent and co-eternal with God. He is spiritual and perfect; page 475, "Man is incapable of sin, sickness and death, inasmuch as he derives his essence from God, and possesses not a single reginal or underived power. Hence the real man cannot depart form holiness, nor can God, by whom man was evalved, engender the capacity or freedom to sin." Thus man is as perfect as God; he has never fallen into sin; yea, he cannot sin because he is not endowed with free will to choose the good and refuse the evil ("God cannot engender the freedom to sin") the real man is not a sinner in any true sense of the word because he is the image and likeness of God.

Thus enough has been said to show that Christian Science by making God (The Good) The All absolutely wipes out of existence everything that is contrary to it, and asserts the alone existence of one Principle, Mind, Being, Substance. Man, being eternal as God, holy as God, and inseparable from God (page 476) is included in The All. The Good (God). Page 361, "As a drop of wateris one with the ocean, a ray of light one with the sun, even so God and man, Father and son, are one in being." This also is Hinduism, as Mr. Fairchild says: 'It teaches that man is a part of God even as a drop of water is a part of the ocean."

If this is not pantheism, then words have no meaning, and etymology has no significance. Christian Science is thorough-going pantheism and as such it is heathenism, but, heathenism disguised. It wears a Christian garb. It claims to be based on the Bible, comes in the name of Christ, quotes scripture, professes to be the faith of the Apostles. But a careful reading of its declaration of faith in Mrs. Eddy's book reveals its true character. With much apparent logic and a glibness of speech that sounds reverent and Biblical it aims insidiously to destroy every fundamental Christian truth.

To say that God is the only substance, that He is the all is to identify Him with His own creation, and to make no distinction between the Creator and that which He creates. And this, of course, is to deny the personality of God. A God who is not transcendent over nature or creation as well as immanent in it is not a personal God. Christian Science logically, inevitably, in the very nature of the case, starting out with its basic principle that God is all must deny the personality of God.

Again to say that sin is only a false belief and has no objective reality because it does not originate in God is to say that there can be no opposition to God. But from the oratorio of creation in Genesis to the antiphonal song of redemption in Revelation the history of sin is described as a desolation between man and man, and as a warfare between man and God. "The carnal mind is enmity against God," (Romans 8:7) "When we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son;" (Roman 5:10). "Rebel not ye against the Lord," (number 14:9). Sin is primarily against the Creator—and for that reason "God only can forgive sins," it is an outrage against Him, an assault upon Him, a warfare with Him. Just because it is contrary to His character, antagnostic to His whole being and sets at defiance His rule and authority it is the most awful reality in the universe. It does not originate in the will of God, but in the self-loving human heart and the self-serving human will, and is just as real, just as actual as that human heart and that human will. Christian Science denies that it is enmity to God, rebellion against Him, and holds that it is merely a false belief that evil has reality. Thus Eddyism repudiates the Christian conception of sin contained in the Bible.

It is unnecessary to proceed further. A religion that is wrong in its fundamentals, its conception of God and its attitude toward sin is wrong all along the line. Failing here it must necessarily fail everywhere.

The demonstration is complete that Mrs. Eddy's doctrine is not the religion of the Bible, but the pantheistic philosophy of the hoary East revamped and made over under her plastic touch into something that looks like Christianity, but when probed to the core is found to be heathenism from which we turn away in horror.

With Mr. Perrine I also would recommend to your readers Rev. I. M. Haldeman's book, "Christian Science in the Light of Holy Scripture."

CARE OF HOUSE PLANTS.

Watering is by far the most important duty in taking care of the indoor garden. Sickly plants, in six cases out of ten, are the result of being watered just whenever the owner happens to think of it. A good percentage of the remainder are caused by an excess of water. Too much is as bad as too little. When overwatered the roots are unable to absorb all the moisture. This causes the soil to become soaked, thus excluding the air. Then the earth becomes sour, the roots decay, and the leaves of the plant turn yellow and fall off. When underwatered the roots dry up with similar results.

All potted plants should be watched. Rub a pinch of the soil between the fingers. If it crumbles up without caking, then you know it is time to administer water; if it cakes, then there is still enough moisture unabsorbed. The water should be of the same temperature as the room in which the plants are kept and should be clear.

Syringing is also important. All plants should be so treated except those whose leaves are covered with hairs. The value of syringing is that it helps to keep the foliage clean, the breathing pores of the plants open and the leaves and stems free from insects.

On warm days this syringing should be done outside, putting the plants where they can get the sun while taking their bath. It is better not to use a nozzle, but place the thumb over the opening of the hose and spray the water so that it may fall on the leaves like rain. In cold weather this should be done in the bathroom.

Plants with large and tough leaves, such as palms and rubber plants, need to be sponged from time to time. Do this lightly and don't rub the leaves.
